EVER THE SAME.

When we wore trunks that swept the street And cleaned the sidewalk of complete. And kept the curb all clean and neat. They kicked about it.

And when our skirts climbed up a bit Some inches from the dirt and grit. And showed our shoes, all neat and fit— They kicked about it.

Dressed in a dinky little hat. They laughed and peered and smiled at that: But when we donned a baby flat, They kicked about it.

Since they began to write the novel. They've told how we, in hall or hotel. To catch a man would hunt and grovel— And kicked about it.

But since a little change began. And some of us who've learned the plan. Aren't wife so crazy for a man— They kick about it.

Even if the man down on the dump Will hold his yawp, some college clump. D. D. or Prof. will mount the stump And kick about us.

It seems they haven't work enough To run their schools and raise the stuff. They're always time to tell how tough We are, and kick about it.

Race suicide calls forth their tear. But let a widow lone appear With nine at Ellis Isle, they'll steer Her back, and kick about it.

It beats all H—all fax, how sage And drivelling fools, from age to age Will still their ponderous minds engage With us; no doubt about it.

What lordly brain did first begin it? Good Heaven sake, what is there in it? Why can't they let us be a nation? We wouldn't kick about it. —ANON.

Death has cast its pall over several Coos Bay homes during the week and will mean the withdrawal of a number from society temporarily. Her passing away will be sincerely regretted by all. The children here are Mrs. D. Y. Stafford, Mrs. Perry and Mrs. Jay Montgomery. Thanksgiving was generally observed on Coos Bay in the usual way. There were no big functions, family dinner parties being the feature. There were services at practically all of the churches in the morning, and then followed a football game, or a light luncheon and then football and then the big turkey dinner. In the evening, several shows and a few dances afforded an opportunity to those who had sufficient ambition left to desire to wander from the fireside. The morning was a little crisp but the remainder of the day was almost ideal.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Powers entertained a number of the young men employed at the C. A. Smith mill at Thanksgiving dinner. Among their guests were L. W. Holmberg, Enoch Holmberg, Gus Brown, Al Lofgren, Victor Johnson, H. E. Quist and W. J. Conrad.
