Walter Lyon Ursu Naming and Numbering Streets
Does Portland, OR.
In a letter to Mayor E. H. Straub, Walter Lyon Ursu suggests that the final decision on the naming and numbering streets of the new street grid in Portland should be left to the people of the city. The suggestion is based on the belief that the people of the city should have a say in the matter and that a public vote would ensure that the streets are named in a way that reflects the community's values.

The suggestion is made in the context of a larger debate about the naming of streets in the city. Some have argued that streets should be named for important historical figures, while others have suggested that streets should be named for local landmarks or other significant features. The mayor, in response to Ursu's suggestion, has indicated that he is open to considering public input on the matter.

The issue of street naming is a complex one, with many different perspectives and interests at play. The mayor's openness to public input is seen as a positive step towards ensuring that the final decision on the naming of streets in Portland reflects the values and priorities of the community.

WASHINGTON, JUN. 19.—When the International Joint Commission meets here today, it will consider the petition of the board of directors of the Panama Canal Company for an extension of its authority to the year 1950. The company, in a letter to the commission, said that it is necessary for it to extend its authority in order to complete the works at the mouth of the Panama Canal and to continue its activities.

The commission, in its decisions, has previously extended the authority of the company for a period of 20 years, but the company has now requested an extension of its authority for another 20 years.

The company, in its petition, cited the importance of the Panama Canal to the world's commerce and the need for it to continue its operations in order to maintain the canal's efficiency and effectiveness.

The commission is expected to make a decision on the company's petition today.

Walter Harvey, a prominent lawyer in Portland, has announced his candidacy for the office of district attorney. Harvey, who has served as a judge in the city for many years, has expressed his desire to bring a new perspective to the office of district attorney.

Harvey, in a statement, said that he is running for the office because he believes that the district attorney's office is in need of new leadership. He has expressed his commitment to working closely with the police department and the community to ensure that justice is served.

Harvey's announcement comes in the context of a larger debate about the role of the district attorney in the community. Some have argued that the district attorney should be more proactive in preventing crime, while others have suggested that the office should focus more on ensuring that justice is served.

The election for the office of district attorney is scheduled for the fall, and Harvey's candidacy is expected to spark a lively debate about the role of the office and the responsibilities of the district attorney.
