GETS WEATHER DATA.

Government Experts to Visit Coos County.

ROSEBURG, Ore., May 21. — N. B. Fuller of the United States Weather Bureau, left for Coos county on the stage to establish new mountain snowfall stations, where records are to be kept regarding precipitation at the heads of small streams in all parts of the state. Under recommendation of President Roosevelt, after the conference of the governors of the states of the union, held a year ago at Washington, the weather bureau, geological survey, reclamation service and the bureau of Indian affairs formed a working agreement to obtain this and other information regarding the undeveloped resources of the country, especially in this western country.

The weather bureau has already established 42 stations of this class in this state. The department is desirous to have persons living at the head of small streams, at points where no reports are now furnished, communicate with the weather bureau with reference to co-operating with the bureau. Reports, when made in accordance with regulations, are paid for by the government, and the only essentials are accuracy and promptness.

FUEL SHORTAGE SAVES LIFE.

YORK, Pa., May 21. — The gasoline in a traction engine, which Adam Crumbling, 80 years old, of Lower Windsor township, was drawing into his barn, gave out just in time to save him from death.

Crumbling had been threshing grain and was pulling the engine into the barn by means of a snatch block, using the engine's own power, when the rope gave way, catching him and dragging him toward the machinery. His arm was broken and he was in danger of being crushed, with no way of shutting off the power, when the gasoline gave out and the engine stopped.
