THE JOY OF LIVING.

N THE SIMPLE philosophy of Chas S. Hilborn, Coos Bay's oldest citizen, who is now nearing his ninetieth year there, is a message for the youngsters who have not yet sighted their seventieth milestone and have grown weary of the world and its troubles,

Charlie, his friends call him Charlie, and age cannot alter the affectionate regard they hold for him and that prompts this familiar term of endearment. Charlie came across the Bay the other day from his home among the flowers and fruits and trees where he and his estimable wife live and love, and laugh, and enjoy life together, and Dr. Straw took him up to the Millicoma Club to show him the advancement Marshfield has been making. Other friends met him there and one wished him another ninety years of life.

"I don't know that I want to live for ninety years more, but I do not want to die; not because I am afraid to, but because this is a good world full of good people. I am happy, the sky is blue, the birds sing. should I not want to stay?"

Why indeed? Perhaps if we all paid a little more attention to the songs of the birds, gave more heed to the sunshine, the flowers and the blue sky, there would be more octogenarians and a greater volume of testimony that this is a good world
