OCTOBER.

One day of thine is like to all the blandishments of spring—
The beauty of the flowers and the apple blooms of May,
The rhapsodies of meadow larks that in the morning sing,
And the fragrance of the waking earth at breaking of the day.
Dear God, the world is beautiful—grown hoary in the Fall—
The tempered sun upspringing in the near and hazy sky,
The shrill alarm of winter in the migrant's thrilling call,
And the beauty of the foliage when it is come to die.

There is a sweet retreat I know where Pan still loves to play
A threnody for sorrow that the year is growing old,
And in that sanctuary at the closing of the day
It is as if for summer time a distant bell were tolled.
Ah me, how sweet the spirit of thy melancholy grows,
The plaintive notes and timid as the birds go trooping by,
The mellow splendor of the sun that ever softer glows,
And the beauty of the foliage when it is come to die.

NOT EVERY girl is born gifted. In fact, it seems as if sometimes it needed a microscope to discover what some girls can do well. This is not a matter of education or opportunity entirely, for long and careful training often fails in results.

Do you repine and envy anyone who can sit down and play off real classical music without her notes; or some other girl who can sing all the latest songs from popular operas and can even manage to tune up on Schumann and Lisa Lehman; or still another girl who paints the "sweetest" posters and dinner cards and has a big oil painting to her credit? It is not given to every girl to sing, play or paint, but we have all been martyrs to the "accomplished" girl.

This is a day when accomplishments must spell trained talents to give pleasure. One may be much more popular than the friends they envy, just because you have no gifts to show off and bore the world. What you are counts so much more than what you do in winning favor. You may be accomplished, even gifted, but if you have no charm of manner, a gay, good fellowship, kindness of spirit and the power to fit it, you will miss many a good friend.

You may successfully tackle the technique of a Strauss, sing like the proverbial lark and go so far as to get your picture hung in the French salon, but if you are selfish, or "snippy" socially you will be in no danger of being haunted by social success.

There are many ways in which a so-called stupid girl may make herself felt. Her parlor graces may be few, but if she has a pretty knack of making others comfortable; if she can bring out the best in those who talk to her instead of overshadowing them, her friendship stock will be way above par. A sweet nature and willingness to give yourself for the pleasure of your friends will give those friends more real and lasting pleasure than if you appeal to their aesthetic sense with your fingers or your voice.

Mrs. C. W. Tower entertained the Evergreen Club at her home last Saturday afternoon. The play resulted in Mrs. A. T. Haines and Mrs. Eugene O'Connell being tied for first honors. Mrs. O'Connell winning on the "cut." Mrs. P. M. Wil-
