NEWSPAPER AS SCHOOL BOOK

A COURSE IN THE New York York high schools which the public knows little or nothing about but which has a great bearing in the education of the pupil—that of learning to read the newspapers correctly—was a short time ago established and is declared to be meeting with great success.

The course is conducted in connection with the study of city government, such as has been found to be successful in the schools of Chicago. As there is no text-book that can cover this study, the educators picked out the daily newspaper, from which the students are expected to learn and digest all about the city.

Speaking of this recently, one of the school officials said:

"There is no text-book for this work and naturally cannot be one. The material for this is always current, and such text-book as we have will be the newspaper. One thing, of course, it has already done is to teach the boys and girls to use newspapers intelligently.

"The boys would open at the sporting page and then read only headlines forward and back. The girls never read the papers at all. They never knew the most common events of daily happenings. Now one of our exercises is for the classes to decide each day what was the most important piece of news in the

COOS' LEGEND HER SUBJECT

Mrs. Henry Sengstacken Author of Excellent Volume of Poetry.

"A Legend of the Coos" is the title of Coos Bay's latest contribution to literature and one that promises to win the author, Mrs. Henry Sengstacken, renown. She writes under her maiden name, Agnes Ruth Lockhart, and the first copies of the book were received here yesterday, having been published by a San Francisco house. The book is dedicated to the Milliloma Club of Marshfield, an organization bearing the name of one of the principal characters of the story.

In verse, she tells one of the prettiest legends not only of Oregon but of the west. In purest English and perfect verse, the details of the legend are told, prettier far in poetry than in prose in which some have heard bits of the lore which Mrs. Sengstacken has connected up into a complete story.

The legend deals with Neska, the daughter of Millilomah, chief of the Upper river, now known as North Coos River, although early named, the Milliloma or Millilomah river and her attempted elopement after she had been promised to Lahtonish, son and successor to Chief Dallobs of the tribe residing on the Bay proper. The story of the tribal visit and the betrothal feast is told and of the meeting of the hunter bold from the Umpqua who secretly had won Neska's heart. The attempted flight, foiled by the midnight visit of the white crowned sparrow, followed by Indian justice and a wedding in which even force could not victor over love are portrayed. But to tell the gist of the legend in prose is ill-fitting when all is so admirably told in verse and everyone interested in Coos Bay should read Mrs. Sengstacken's work and give her the honor that she deserves for it.

A Belleville, Ill., man who is 97 years of age asserts that he never eats more than one pound of meat in a year. That may be the average for a good many Coos Bayites if the price goes much higher.

When automobilizing, it doesn't pay to be too particular. In California six people were badly injured because the chauffeur tried to avoid killing a dog.

AT THE THEATRE.

Manager Butler's vaudeville made a decided hit at the Masonic Opera House last night. There was a fair attendance and seldom if ever has a Marshfield audience bestowed approval on an attraction the way it did last evening. The Chicago Newsboys Quartette and the acrobats were repeatedly encored and were generous in their responses. Manager Butler has decided to make it a continuous show each evening instead of attempting to give two performances. This will enable theatre goers to enter at any time and see the whole performance. Illustrated songs and some moving pictures are other features of the show.

BUYS TRACT IN EASTSIDE

H. P. Campbell Pays $10,000 For Fred Timmerman's Holdings There.

It is announced that H. P. Campbell, a recent arrival from Seattle, has purchased the 25 lots in Fred Timmerman's holdings in block 6 of Eastside for $10,000. The price makes a new high record for Eastside realty. Mr. Campbell says he bought the tract for a home. The deal was negotiated by Stutsman and Company.

Wm. Campbell, a son of H. P. Campbell, recently bought the M. J. Mangan property on South Broadway and also three lots on South Broadway near the city limits from Lewis Smith and Frank Smith.
