DEER INVADE NEW ENGLAND TOWNS

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Dec. 21.—Rigidly enforced protective legislation in Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut has enabled deer, which were last becoming extinct, to multiply until they are now more numerous in Central New England than they were at the time of the revolutionary war.

The continuous stretch of more or less sparsely inhabited territory, with its abundant supply of small fruits and garden truck, so tempting to the deer, has become for practical purposes an immense deer preserve. A decade ago the summer visitor in New England rarely caught a glimpse of a wild deer. Five years later the deer had become more numerous, but were still an object of curiosity. In the last two seasons so numerous have the deer become that they have done much damage to gardens and orchards.

The deer have become bolder with increased numbers and the presence of one of the animals in the streets of the larger towns and even the cities is frequently reported. Hunters have estimated that there are in Central New England upward of 10,000 deer. The fact that 2,000 deer have been killed in a single week in each year in the last two open seasons in Vermont is evidence of the great numbers of them.

The deer question promises to be the subject of lively debate in the legislatures of Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut. On the one hand the friends of the animals plead for a continuance of the present protective laws, on the ground that the damage done by the deer is over-estimated, and that the deer is harmless.

Opposed to this argument is the contention of farmers that they should be allowed to kill for their own use deer found on their own land. In Vermont, the open season tends to keep down the number of the animals, and in Massachusetts under a recently enacted law, the farmer may kill deer which commit depredations upon his land. In Connecticut killing of deer to protect one's property is allowable, provided it is done with a shotgun.

The prevalence of deer has given rise to a crop of animal stories. From Northfield, Mass., recently there came a story of hens attacking a deer. Last week a buck deer gave battle to two dogs in Westfield, and according to witnesses the dogs came out a very poor second. Not very long ago a pure white deer was killed in Hadley, Mass.

Ernest L. Merriam of Ware, reported that while driving to West Warren a deer attempted to jump into his wagon. A Belchertown farmer driving to Ware found his progress barred by a buck deer. The farmer pelted the deer with apples and now seeks to recover the value of the apples from the county commissioners under the deer damages compensation act.

RIGHTSIDE is a Winner.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years a doctor's profession it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven, however, that it is curable. It is taken in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoon. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists. CURED HAY FEVER AND SUMMER COLD
A. S. Nusbaum, Batesville, Indiana, writes: "Last year I suffered for three months with a summer cold so distressing that it interfered with my business, I had many of the symptoms of hay fever, and a doctor's prescription did not reach my case, and I took several medicines which seemed only to aggravate it. Fortunately I insisted upon having Foley's Honey and Tar. It quickly cured me. My wife has since used Foley's Honey and Tar with the same success."—RED CROSS Pharmacy, (John Preuss, Prop.)
