THE KIND MOTHER USED TO MAKE.

Her smiles? Ah, they are mighty sweet!
They fill my days with sun and shine.
They gild the paths before my feet
With glory golden and divine.
They fill me with ambitions fair
For tasks immortals undertake,
And spur me on, for they're
The kind that Mother used to make!

Her eyes? Ah, they are deeply blue.
How I rejoice to watch their light
As they flash out on care and rue
And drive all worry out of sight!
And when she uses them—ah, me!
To stir me, how my pulses quake,
For they're again the kind, you see,
The kind that Mother used to make!

Her cooking? Ah, what genius lies
Behind each culinary scheme!
Such rabbits rare, such pumpkin pies
Each dish a sweetly dainty dream.
It matters not what she may do,
Whatever she shall mix or bake,
There is not one unequal to
The kind that Mother used to make!

And when at night, returning late,
From business cares—and other things—
I find her waiting at the gate,
Or upstairs full of murmurings,
I think of many a bygone day,
And how my daddy used to shake.
For her remarks are, sad to say,
The kind that Mother used to make!

"WHY DON'T you pay attention to some of the nice girls you know?" I asked a young man the other day, when he complained of being lonely, says Beatrice Fairfax.

"Because I am not in a position to marry, and a man can't enjoy a mere friendship with a girl without his intentions being misconstrued," was the prompt answer.

If that is so, it is time things were changed, and the girls themselves are the ones to do it.

A firm friendship between a man and a girl is good for both of them, and it is ridiculous that it should be misconstrued.

Many young men do not feel that they care to marry until they have become well established, and can offer a girl all the comforts to which she has been accustomed.

That being the case, must they abstain from girls' society until they are ready to marry?

Some girls look on every man they meet as a possible husband.

Just because a man finds a girl pleasant to talk with and calls upon her once a week, and takes her to the theater occasionally, it is no sign that he has fallen in love with her.

I do think that a man has not the right to occupy a girl's time to the exclusion of other men, unless his intentions are serious; but I am talking about the men whose casual attentions are misunderstood.

A girl of any intelligence knows pretty well the value of a man's attention—that is, she knows the value that he places upon them.

If she places greater value on them than he does it is because she wishes to do so.

A man often finds a girl a most charming companion with whom to while away a few hours, but she is not necessarily "the only woman."

It is a situation which the girl must control; she must keep her wits about her, and not allow her heart and vanity to misconstrue words and actions which have no deep meaning.

Every city is full of earnest, hard-working young men who would much enjoy the society of nice girls.

But they feel they cannot enter upon friendships which will be misunderstood.

"The girls of to-day demand so much," one young man said to me ruefully. "A fellow feels that he is not wanted unless he can spend plenty of money, and the average young man who is trying to make a success of life cannot afford to spend all he earns."

There is sound logic in that, girls, and it is far more to a girl's credit to help a man to save money than to urge him to squander it.

Of course, every girl enjoys going to the theater and an occasional treat, but don't make the young man feel that they are stingy when they save their money.

No man with any ambition spends all he earns.
The spendthrift makes a poor husband, no matter how gay and enjoyable his courtship may have been.

The man with foresight and real love for you saves his money so he may marry you and give you a good home.

In the meantime, until that one right man appears, enjoy your friendships with other men, and don't imagine that every man who pays attention to you is in love with you.
