DEFYING PUBLIC OPINION.

NINETY-NINE MEN tolled along of them frowned the rocks of a beaten road. On either side the unknown and the untrod. At intervals the road was sharply hedged with thorn-laden rows which menaced a step aside. Behind the hedge and the frowning rocks could be heard the swish-swish of the whiplash of public opinion—of rooted conservatism—stinging gossip—shocked minds of narrow mould directing them. Ahead the hundredth man swerved abruptly to the side. Breaking into the thorny hedge under the frowning rocks he essayed to ascend and fell back torn and bleeding. Ninety-nine men in the beaten path jeered.

Gathering strength he evaded the thorns, taught by his first experience, and vanished in the shadows of the rocks. Ninety-nine men ceased to jeer, but they listened. "Swish-swish," fell the lash of public scorn wielded by the same hand that would always part the hair of the left side because a grandsire did it that way a hundred years before. It scored into the shoulders of the hundredth man. He panted for the beaten path, for the well-trod way and the ninety and nine complacent, comfortable humans jogging along it.

But he did not turn back. He laughed and the lash of opinion whipped out the word "fanatic," and thus he was branded.

Finally he was lost sight of. The frowning rocks and the hedges had hidden him, and ninety-nine smiled a fatuous smile and he was forgotten. Like the opening of a great whirlpool hungry for a victim, the sideroad meshes had involved him.

Ninety-nine, swinging like the inert pendulum of a great clock, helpless of self, but impelled by the power of the spring somebody else had wound, came back that way. Mournfully they gazed into the forbidding expanse where the hundredth man had vanished. The shadows of inaction were falling and the way looked more than ever like the pathway to doom. They shuddered and were about to pass on.

Far above them on the heights glowed the lights of a castle. Across it was emblazoned "SUCCESS." In awed tones they asked themselves, "Who has builded this magnificent castle in the wilderness? What wonderful genius has accomplished this thing?"

Then they remembered the hundredth man.

On every hand they have builded these castles, those hundredth men. Theodore Roosevelt defied public opinion when he first attacked the enemies of the common people.

Castles of success have never been founded on the beaten road. No man who believes things are right because his neighbor says they are or because his grandfather voted that way fifty years ago will ever emblazon success behind the shadows.

No man can succeed by keeping with the crowd in order to have company. The hundredth man wins.

NURSERY ADVICE.

The anxious mother rings up what she thinks is the day nursery to ask for some advice as to her child. She asks the central for the nursery, and is given Mr. Gottfried Gluber, the florist and tree-dealer. The following conversation ensues:

"I called up the nursery. Is this the nursery?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I am so worried about my little Rose."

"Vat seems to be der madder?"

"Oh! not so very much, perhaps, but just a general listlessness and lack of life."

"Ain'd growing righd, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Veil, I dell you vat you do. You dake der skissors und cut off apoud two inches vrom der limbs, und"—

"Wha-a-at?"

"I say, dake der skissors und cut off apoud two inches vrom der limbs, und den turn der garten-hose on for apoud four hours in der morning"—

"Wha-a-at?"

"Turn der garten-hose on for apoud four hours in der morning, und den pile a lot of plack dirt all around, und shprinkle mit insegt-powder all ofer der top"—

"Sir-r-r!"

"Shprinkle mit insegt-powder all ofer der top. You know usually id is noddings but pugs dot"—

"How dare you? What do you mean by such language?"

"Noddings but pugs dot chenerally causes der troubles; und den you vant to vash der rose mit a liquid breparations I haf for sale"—

"Who in the world are you, anyway?"

"Gottfried Gluber, der florist."

"O-o-oh!" weakly. "Good-bye."— Buffalo Express.
