FOREST FIRE SCARES.

Big Blaze in Myrtle Point Slashes Causes Fright.

A fire that burned the Davenport slashing Wednesday attracted considerable attention from Myrtle Point people. It looked from here like it was burning over a lot of country, and the wind that was blowing seemed to whip it forward at a rapid pace until the whole mountainside seemed to be ablaze. The smoke swept upward in a vast column, making a pretty sight. No particular damage was reported from the fire, although it ran in some green timber.—Myrtle Point Enterprise.

MOTION IN BOOM CASE.

Property at Mouth of Coos River Is Involved.

The following regarding the Coos Bay boom case was printed in the Portland Telegram:

B. B. Beekman, attorney for the plaintiffs in the case of E. W. Bernitt and Victor Wittick against the Smith-Powers Logging Company, the C. A. Smith Lumber Company and the Simpson Lumber Company, appeared in court this morning and asked that the time for answer be fixed as September 24th. This is the case in which two former owners of a boom now possessed by the Smith-Powers Logging Company brought suit to recover it, and asked that a receiver be named to take charge of this particular piece of property until the case is settled. The boom is worth only a few thousand dollars, whereas the plant of the logging company is worth more than $500,000, and considerable confusion existed as to whether the receiver was for a portion or all the property. It is now said that possession of the boom, which at present is unused by the big logging company, is the contention.
