FIFTY-FIVE MEN ARE MISSING IN COLORADO MINE DISASTER

The explosion of a coal mine at Gunnison, Colorado, early this morning caused by some mismanagement of the cartridge powder, has resulted in the death of not less than 50 men. About 150 men were in the mine at the time of the explosion, and from the reports of those who rushed to the scene of the disaster, there is no indication that more than 50 of the men will be saved. The disaster happened at about 12 o'clock, and the men were working at extremely shallow levels.

The names of those known to have been injured or killed will be published here in a full report of the accident, which is expected to be issued by the State Department of Mines. The news caused a sensation at the State Capitol, and Governor Thompson has called a special session of the legislature for the beginning of business Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

The State is sending a special force of miners to Sangre de Cristo county on Saturday morning. The President of the Colorado Mine Workers' Union, Mr. M. H. McAdoo, has been sent to the scene of the disaster, and the President of the National Mine Workers' Union, Mr. J. B. Page, has been authorized to come here at once. A number of State officials have been appointed to the special committee to look after the men and the miners who have been injured in the disaster. The Denver Post, the Rocky Mountain News, the Associated Press, the United Press and the International News are all sending representatives to the scene of the disaster.

The special committee has already been appointed and is now on its way to the scene of the disaster. The committee consists of seven members, all of whom are experienced miners. They are present at the mine, and are looking after the men who have been injured in the disaster. The committee will report to the State legislature, and its report will be published here in a full report of the accident, which is expected to be issued by the State Department of Mines.
