IT IS A MATTER OF PRIDE

With the makers of Snow Drift Flour. They know that if the housewife is sure that she gets the same kind of flour in every sack she is going to buy that brand every time she orders. So the makers of Snow Drift have installed a model baking plant in their mill. Every batch of flour that goes through is tested in the laboratory first, then a baking of bread is made. Every loaf of bread from every baking must be uniform with every loaf of bread from every other baking. In this way the makers are sure the flour is the same—always. The careful housewives—the particular ones—insist upon such a brand when they can procure it. Snow Drift is such a flour.
