INCREASE IN PRICE OF WOOD PULP

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES ABOUT AN INDUSTRY THAT SHOULD HAVE A MILL LOCATED ON COOS BAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 10.—There were 253 wood-pulp mills in operation during the whole or a part of the calendar year 1909 in the United States, as against 251 in 1908. The consumption of pulp wood in these mills during 1909 was 4,302,000 cords, as against 3,347,000 cords in 1908; an increase of about 19 per cent.

This information appears in a preliminary comparative report covering 1909, 1908, and 1907, which was transmitted today to Census Director Durand by Chief Statistician William M. Stewart, under whose supervision it was prepared by J. E. Whelchel, expert special agent of the Division of Manufactures. In cooperation with the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, the Census Bureau annually publishes a special report relative to the wood-pulp industry.

It is especially noticeable that since 1907 there has been a decided decrease in the consumption of the best known and highest priced pulp wood, namely, spruce, this species contributing 68.1 per cent of the total in 1907, 64.5 per cent in 1908, and 60.5 per cent in 1909. There has also been a slight decrease in aspen, whereas corresponding increases have occurred in the consumption of woods heretofore little used as pulp material, such as balsam, white fir, and several hard woods, including birch, beech, maple, gum, and basswood. This increase is especially marked in the case of balsam, the quantity of this species consumed in 1909 being more than double that reported for 1908.

Spruce Shows Steady Decrease. The steady decrease in the annual consumption of spruce has been accompanied by a substantial increase in the average cost per cord of this species. As indicated by the figures, this was $8.90 in 1907, $9.33 in 1908, and $9.96 in 1909.

The tendency to use the woods less highly considered in pulp making became more marked as the cost of other species and the available supply increased. White fir, which separately shown for the first time in 1909; is one of the woods of good quality for pulp which has been utilized only during recent years. It is very common in the national forests, and at present has a rather low value, due both to the lack of knowledge of its pulp value and to the lack of other uses for it. The development of the use of this wood for pulp will mean much for the national forests' management, for it will make it possible to dispose of much material for which there has hitherto been little demand.

The advancing cost of pulp wood of all species is clearly brought out in the report. The total consumption in 1909, though exceeding that of 1907 by less than 40,000 cords, cost over $2,000,000 more.

The quantity of slabs and other mill waste consumed as pulp material was substantially the same in 1909 and in 1908, about 250,000 cords in each year, which, however, was a material increase in the consumption of this character of material over 1907, when 193,000 cords of it were reported as used.

The reported total production of air-dry pulp in 1909 was 2,491,406 tons, as against 2,118,947 tons in 1908 and 2,547,879 tons in 1907. The table follows:

Kind of Wood.	Quantity.	Cost.

THE REAL TEST.
'Tis a cinch to be bright and cheerful
When life seems a golden span,
But the chap worth while
Is the one that will smile
When his wife says, "Pet,
Breakfast's not ready yet.
I just had to wait
Till you patch up the grate,"
Smile then, ah, that is the man!
