MANY WAIT FOR MILL WHISTLE

Marshfield People Oversleep Today In Consequence of Change In Time.

"Well, did you sleep too long this morning?"

This was not an infrequent question today and not a few 'fessed up that they didn't arise as early as usual and all because the Smith mill whistle has been the alarm clock of many Coos Bay homes.

This morning, the new eight-hour day went into effect at the mill and consequently the whistle blew at 8 o'clock instead of 7 o'clock. The people who have been accustomed to arising when the 7 o'clock whistle blew were waiting for it and took it for granted that it was 7 instead of 8 o'clock. So, when they arose, they found to their consternation they were an hour late.

A number of children were tardy at school on account of it and not a few business men and clerks were late getting around this morning and the first thing a number did was to buy alarm clocks.
