RIBBONS ARE GIVEN TODAY

Little Red Hen was clearly getting peevish.

“What have I done, sweetheart? Why, that's easy. I need only to remind you, little one, that I'm that festive bird of warning that Shakespeare speaks so glowingly about, who singeth all night long. I'm the chap that bawled out Peter way back 'n the dusky past. I'm the old scout that stands up on the weather-vane and tells the boss which way the wind blows, and, furthermore, I don't see you wearing any spurs, milady.” Whereupon the sly old rooster chuckled at his own merry jest, and took a little drink out of his new tin cup.

It was feeding time, and the boss came around and tossed some fine ground bone and meat scraps to the Little Red Hen and gave the rooster only a sprig of cabbage stalk. There was silence in the neighboring coops for a moment, when the L. R. H. with a smile remarked:

“Some class to this layout, eh, old gaudy-shanks? I don't see you getting any swell eats like this. How do you like that new-mown sauerkraut? Been a vegetarian long? Sorry, but this bone feed and scraps are mighty fine, and I guess I'll turn in and hand the boss a nice little 65-cent egg while you finish your cold-slaw.”

The Big Brown Rooster muttered something that sounded like “stingy” and started a hoarse rasping challenge for the clumsy and sleepy old Barred Rock on the other side of him. The Little Red Hen began to cackle, and pretty soon there was set in motion a barnyard medley that woke up the coy pigeons down the line and the prim and graceful pheasants across the room. The shrill falsettos of the tufted Houdans mingled with the harsh, deep, rumbling crows of the Black Minorcas. The pigeons blinked their pretty eyes and cooed and crooned, while the huge Cochins added their lusty voices to the general pandemonium. The restless, nervous guineacocks piped their shrill notes amid some angry expletives from the nearby gamecock cages.

The big show and noise was on, and the banter of the Big Brown Rooster and the Little Red Hen was forgotten.

The fine exhibition of the first annual Coos Poultry and Pet Show is attracting much interest. The representation of the standard breeds is unusually large and the judging indicates that competitions are close in all classes. The show will be open until tomorrow noon and everyone should make it a point to attend.

LIBRARY NOTICE.

The story hour will be as usual at eleven o'clock tomorrow at the library and will be for the older young people. Program “Constance” from Chaucer; “Lady Clare” and “The Lord of Burleigh” from Tennyson.

The library has a new table with benches to match for children. It is in the mission style, the material being donated by C. A. Smith Lumber Company, and the work being done by R. A. Corthell. Both parties have the thanks of the committee and of the children, who are delighted with their new furniture.

CULLINGS OF COQUILLE.

The Herald.

Coos County Seat News As Told By Walter and Ray Norris were in from Fairview on Monday to consult a physician concerning the foot of the former, upon which a horse fell several days ago badly bruising it up and dislocating some of the bones.

Bruce Johnson and Roy Dunham, of this city, and Walter Johnson, of Gravel Ford, went to the Bay and took the steamer Fifield as she departed from that port for San Francisco where they go to see the big city and a little of the outside world. W. H. Schroeder, the jeweler, received a hard fall on the cement pavement near the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank last Saturday and has not been able to go to his shop since. His brother, Gus, came down from Myrtle Point yesterday and will look after his business for a few days. Mr. Schroeder's knee was severely bruised and sprained, but no bones were broken.

Miss Elsie Peoples, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Peoples, of this city, returned lately from a visit with relatives in California. She had been absent since June.
