COOS BAY AS LAST CHANCE

sea and the crest of the bar at low tide, which can undoubtedly be impressed to a very much greater amount, as soon as the work being done on the inner harbor requires it.

"Four hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated by the government to continue this improvement and the dredge Oregon is at the present time improving the inner harbor.

"The Southern Pacific has already spent several million dollars in the purchase of its coal mines and the railroad from Marshfield to Myrtle Point and in the work of this extension from Drain to Coos Bay and has a corps of engineers, twenty-seven in number, already in the field surveying a line from Eugene to Coos Bay.

"The Haines road which has the work of surveying from Roseburg to Marshfield completed has procured the right of way and terminal grounds for what is said to be the Jim Hill road, which is to be extended from Salem to Eugene and from Eugene to Roseburg and from Roseburg to Coos Bay. All of this would indicate beyond any question that there is to be one more great, grand, magnificent city to be constructed on the Pacific slope and those of us living to day will probably never see the time when another Seattle, or another Portland, or any other San Francisco will be erected, except we live a few years longer to see one viewing with them or supremacy, constructed on Coos Bay. There is no other on the coast to compare with it unoccupied. It is the only one left which can accommodate as large vessels as the others. It is the only one whose natural resources will justify the transportation assured it. It looks like any one who will take the trouble to look into it that these things will occur here before long and that as anything of the kind happening again on the coast this will be the last chance for such marvelous possibilities to occur. It is worth giving the subject some thought. The people who made millions in the four cities named by the increase in valuation of property there are probably the ones who will take advantage of the situation here, as they can possibly see further into the future than some of us mossbacks, who thirty years ago would not believe that there would be a town in Marshfield of five thousand inhabitants, or that concrete or brick buildings would ever be needed to accommodate the business of this section.

"Even without railroad facilities Coos Bay has two of the most modern saw mills in the world which have recently been constructed here by C. A. Smith, who owns in connection with them enough timber land of his own to keep them running day and night for the next hundred years, and the other mills are being improved continually so as to make the production of lumber cheaper.

"The number and size of the vessels plying between Coos Bay and out side ports, and the products they transport is a guarantee of prosperity, even though the railroad should never be constructed, but when you take into consideration Coos Bay as it is and as it compares with the other harbors on the coast, it is easy to convince one-self that there is but one place left for another magnificent city to be built, and that place is on Coos Bay."
