TIPS FOR SEA BATHERS.

How Hair Injured by Salt Water May Be Restored.

First an application of grease and then a most thorough shampooing and massaging are the two agents most beneficial for restoring color and texture to hair that has been injured by salt water. Unfortunately the treatment is not unlike that given when effort is being made to restore color after bleaching, for in both cases the condition is similar. Natural oils of the scalp have been dried, and it is many weeks before they are brought back to normal.

When salt water is the cause of injury it becomes necessary before doing anything else to remove all the stickiness which sea water makes. Its effect upon the hair is very peculiar being almost "mossy," so gummy do the locks become, and, while it may seem easy to wash this out, it is very difficult. Soap cannot be used, it only makes a bad matter worse, so there must be repeated rubbings in fresh warm water, changing it frequently so that the salt may not be worked back to the scalp. Hair which is clean has a creaky feeling between the fingers when wet, and the test should be made when trying to remove all salt. The touch to the fingers is not unlike that of silk, and when this is pronounced it is safe to think the locks are clean. Drying should be done both by exposure to sun and by rubbing with soft towels, when the scalp is ready for treatment.

Particularly well suited to the condition is a cream made from one and a half ounces of white vaseline, three-quarters of an ounce of cold drawn castor oil, seven-eighths of a dram of gallic acid and fifteen drops of lavender oil. This is made into a smooth paste, and the hair is divided on the scalp, rubbing the application in the line left bare. The finger tips are really best for putting it on.

Divisions should be made close together, rubbing well until the whole scalp has been anointed, after which ten or fifteen minutes' massage is to be given. This treatment should be had every night, and if the grease is put on carefully it will not show through the hair. If an oily look begins to appear the ointment may be omitted for a night, but massage and good brushing daily are to be kept up.

It is so much easier to prevent injury from salt water than to remove it that effort should be made in the former direction. Treatment for bleached locks is the same, save that quantities of oil must be used daily if any benefits are to be derived.

Self Interest.
 The platform and the principles
 The party chiefs put through
 Look mighty good unto the man
 Who has a job in view.
 He thinks they are the only ones
 To save his native land.
 Because—well, if the truth be told,
 It's money in his hand.

A pleasant little public job
 Will so affect his mind
 That to the fallings of his crowd
 He will be deaf and blind.
 Nor can the fellow ever see,
 No matter what you say,
 Why those who do not get the job
 Believe the other way.

No matter what he used to think
 Regarding this and that,
 His party goes the other way,
 And up will go his hat.
 Though old beliefs it controverts,
 He does not care a rap.
 For what are principles beside
 A lovely public snap?

The party that will place him right
 In the financial swim,
 Will fix him with a penny,
 Is just the one for him.
 The candidate may dance a jig
 On measures once held dear,
 But he cares not a covey if
 The public crib is near.

His Treasurer Knew.

He who goes into politics must remember what he is recorded to have said, for it is the habit of the sharp nosed public to search out past utterances and hold the candidate responsible for them. John Burns, says Mr. Grubb in his life of that labor leader, once made the slip of remarking that no man was worth more than £500 a year. Accordingly, when he became a cabinet member with a salary of £2,000, he was obviously open to attack.

When he first met his constituents at Battersea after he was made president of the local government board a candid friend recalled the statement about a man's worth by calling out in the middle of his speech:

"Wot abaut that 'ere salary of £2,000?"
 Mr. Burns was equal to the occasion.

"That is the recognized trade union rate for the job?" was his apt reply. "If I took less I would be a black-leg."

"Wot yer gold' ter do with the £1,500 over?" pursued the inquisitive questioner.
 "For details," answered Mr. Burns, "apply to my treasurer, Mrs. Burns."

One of Dr. Hale's Jokes.

When he was quite a young man the late Dr. Edward Everett Hale played a practical joke on some girls who were members of a party with whom he was summering on the Massachusetts coast.

All these girls were reading the same exciting novel, and one day at dinner it was a leading topic. Knowing that none of them had finished it, Hale, unknown to them, carried it away with him the next morning when he went to the city. On the train he wrote an absurd conclusion to the novel, laying the final scene at the summer resort.

Carrying this bogus conclusion to a publisher, a friend of his, he had it put in type, and then, carefully removing the bona fide conclusion, he pasted in his own. On his return he placed the book on the piazza and waited. The look which spread over a girl's face as she read that last chapter was, Dr. Hale declared, worth going far to see.—Woman's Home Companion.

The Flying Dutchman.

The Flying Dutchman was a ship which was sometimes visible from various points of land, but more particularly from the Cape of Good Hope in very stormy weather. The story runs that her captain once swore so fearful an oath that as a punishment for his blasphemy he was condemned to beat about the oceans until the day of judgment. The Flying Dutchman was never known to get into port and was generally seen sailing under full canvas before a strong wind. The myth is generally understood to have had its origin in the waterspout, which in the distance resembles a sailing vessel.

Stewards of These Knockers!

The men who do a town more harm than good may be classed as follows: First, those who oppose improvement; second, those who run it down to strangers; third, those who never advertise their business; fourth, those who distrust public spirited men; fifth, those who show no hospitality to any one; sixth, those who hate to see others make money; seventh, those who oppose every movement that does not originate with themselves; eighth, those who put on long faces when a stranger speaks of locating in their town; ninth, those who oppose every public enterprise which does not appear of personal benefit to themselves.
