CIVIC PRIDE A POWER FOR GOOD IN A SCOTTISH CITY.

"WHY," Frederick C. How asked Lord Provost Primrose of Glasgow, "do you give up your time and business for the city?"

The point of the inquiry lies in the fact that the mayoralty of Glasgow costs its occupant $10,000 to $20,000 a year of his own means and the neglect of his business for three years. The mayor replied:

"So far as I can remember I was hoping to be Lord Provost. As a schoolboy I kept before me this ideal of public life. It was an ambition to make the city a little better before I die.

There you have the reason why Glasgow is the most successful municipal democracy the world has ever seen, and why municipal government in the United States has been the colossal failure of American democracy.

The Scotchman was inspired by the spirit of good citizenship in the most literal sense of the term. The American has failed to appreciate the tremendous importance of good government in the city and the privilege of being a servant of the municipality.

This strong sense of citizenship, this intense interest on the part of every citizen in the government of Glasgow spells the secret of the Scotch city's success with municipal ownership of public utilities.

Politics, in the American sense, do not exist in Glasgow. Politics, in the sense of individual views as to every measure or policy of municipal government, vibrate through every citizen of Glasgow and make him consider himself personally responsible for the success of the administration. It is government of the taxpayers. As the municipality owns the utilities, there has so far been no such corruption as the American custom of granting franchises to private parties or corporations causes.

The Glasgow man is a good citizen, because Glasgow is his city. He loves Glasgow, because Glasgow loves its people. It gives him more for his money than any one else does. If public undertakings inspire public spirit in Glasgow why should they not make devotion, enthusiasm and intelligent interest the characteristics of municipal citizenship in Marshfield.

THE OUTLOOK FOR APPLES.

On the question recently raised as to whether there is likely to be an overproduction of apples, the opinion of H. P. Van Deman, the noted apple judge, will command respect. He asserts that there is no danger whatever of overproduction. The market for apples will grow just as the market for wheat has grown. The production of wheat and corn has grown immensely, and yet there is no likelihood of overproduction. Mr. Van Deman was judge at the National Apple show in Spokane and later judged the Hood River show. Now he is judging an apple show in Portland. He knows the apple and the apple business from A to Z and what he says is highly encouraging to apple growers and to those who intend to become apple growers.

MOTHER.

THE biggest and most comprehensive word in the world is "Mother." Have you ever stopped to think just how big it is? Outside of Delti, it is the biggest, most potential name man ever utters. It compasses the whole world and it symbolizes all beauty.

"Mother." Your mother, my mother. The mother of all men.

From the beginning to the end of life "Mother" shapes the destiny of the children of men. In cradle days, our world. In childhood and youth, still our world. In manhood and womanhood—God pity us if anything less.

As a rule, the happiest men and women have been those who have allowed their thoughts of success and happiness to center in their mothers. They have realized that to achieve success would make "Mother" proud and happy, because it would be a justification of her wholesome life—that is reaching the very summit of ambition.

No man has ever been greater than the mother who bore him, no matter how he may think about the matter. Shakespeare gave us immortal verse, but Mary Arden gave us Shakespeare. Abraham Lincoln gave us a new chapter in the great book of human rights, but Nancy Hanks gave us Abraham Lincoln.

So it has been with all the men and women who have adorned the pages of human history. Down under the aspirations of men, down beneath their accomplishments, their holy desires and their righteous inclinations is the fundamental good of a mother—a mother who may have been illiterate, obscure, hard-working and sincere, but the source from whence some brilliant daughter or son drew the supply that made them shine in the world.

To the honor of the human race be it said very few men who have reached the hilltops of success have failed to place the roses and laurels of love and recognition on the brows of those who gave them their all.

When Moses brought the tablets down from the mountains, the first law read to the people was one with regard to worshipping Delti. The second placed upon the children of men the obligation of parental devotion. Thus was parenthood placed second only to Divinity itself. The Son during His stay on earth showed in His attitude towards His mother what the attitude of all men should be towards her who gave them life. All good men and women have followed His teachings gladly and tenderly.

The world looks with exceeding disfavor on those who neglect or abuse mothers or motherhood. The severest condemnation follows neglect of observance of the second great law. The man who abuses or neglects his mother is shunned of all men, and in the estimation of the decent part of the community sinks to the level of the brute.

For every unkindness given, thoughtlessly or otherwise, to "mother," we are made some time to feel the sting of remorse and regret. It may not be until that bitter hour when we stand gazing at a still form; when we look into a face which has become immobile; at eyes closed and from which the love light has faded; at hands no longer busy, and at lips bereft of the power to frame words of love or to place the kiss of affection on beloved brows.

It may not come until, standing beside a mound beneath which rests all that is mortal of one who came to earth an angel in disguise, that we realize all that we have lost, all that we held so lightly when ours to claim, but which now, vanished, is beyond all price.

KATHERINE KIP.

THE NEW PARTIES.

IT WOULD seem from all indications that there are about to be born to this country two new parties which will occupy the place heretofore formed by Republican and Democrats. It does not seem as if the parties will be known by new names, but they will certainly stand for new principles. The Republican party, as is well known, is divided into the progressives and the standpatters. That is to say, for the men that desire certain reforms, the exact nature of which they are not always decided upon, and the men who wish to stand pat upon the old features, of which, however, the nation is evidently tiring.

The division in the Republican party is paralleled in the Democratic; there are progressive Democrats and there are standpatters. From the records of the last election it would seem that though the progressives are not at present numerically dominant, in so far as Congress is concerned, yet that dominance is only a matter of time. In the recent election scarcely a progressive went down to defeat, while the standpatter was often replaced by a Democrat. Not that the nation believed them to be any better than the Republicans, but that a rebuke was intended to the Republican party. The rebuke even included such a man as Colonel Roosevelt. The standpatters went down in such numbers that Uncle Joe has been described as the last survivor of the wreck!

On the other hand there are the same striving elements in the Democratic party and it is probable that within a very few years, possibly before the next congressional election, standpat Democrats and standpat Republicans will come together and form a party of their own, while the progressives of both parties will unite. They must indeed, if they be sincere in their convictions.

What a Pleasure It Is

To make first class bread, biscuit and pastry all the time. The flour has to be the best, of course, but it has to be uniform in every sack too. That's why Snow Drift is so popular. You will find the flour in one sack identically the same in every sack. It is tested at the mill's bake shop to make sure. Every batch of wheat that goes through the mill is washed clean. It isn't touched by human hands from that time till it reaches you. Only the finest selected Northwestern grown, Blue Stem wheat goes into Snow Drift Flour. Try just one sack and learn how good your bread, biscuit and pastry can be.

We Are Going to Move

Our business has outgrown our present location and we are compelled to seek larger quarters.

On January 15th, we will move into the room in the Coos building now occupied by the C. B. Gas & Electric Company.

Our new store will, we believe, be more convenient for residents in all sections of the city, also for all our out-of-town customers.

We are going to have the neatest, completest and most up-to-date pharmacy in this section of Oregon, and will be in a position to give even better service than in the past. We hope to see all our old customers in our new store, and hosts of new ones.

Remember the place, Coos Building Market Avenue, opposite Milner's Hardware Store, and the date, January 15th.
