The Milk in the Coconut.

Probably everybody has wondered at times what kind of stuff the "milk" of the coconut is. One inducement generally held out by the dealer to the prospective purchaser is that the nuts are "all milky." Recent analyses, however, have dispelled the delusion that the fluid has anything in common with real milk. It contains only 4 per cent of solids, consisting chiefly of sugars, 2.8 per cent, the balance being made up of mineral matter and tartaric acid. More than half of the sugar present is mannitol, the sweet principle of manna, which is sometimes found also in wine as a product of normal grape sugar. The question has been discussed as to whether it would be profitable to extract the coconut water for the sake of its cane sugar, but as this amounts to only one-tenth per cent the process would not be commercially successful in spite of the water being a waste product. Even if the water contained 5 per cent of sugar, as some specimens appear to have shown, the recovery of this amount would be unprofitable. The juice of the sugar cane yields nearly 20 per cent of sugar.—New York World.

A Fine Talker.

"I like the looks of this parrot," said the lady who had stepped into the bird store. "Is he a good talker?" The proprietor replied that the bird was an excellent talker, and it was evident the customer was favorably impressed. "What is your price for him?" she asked.

"The man had noticed the rich apparel worn by his customer, and he judged that there was a chance to make a little 'easy money' at the expense of one who would never miss it. 'Ten dollars,' he said, with just the slightest possible hesitation. 'Five dollars, madam,' instantly croaked the parrot.

"The lady looked at the proprietor, who had turned red. 'He certainly is a fine talker,' she said, 'and he also seems to have good sense. I am willing to take him at his own valuation. Do I get him for that?'

"You do," answered the bird man sadly.—Youth's Companion.

The Early Drum.

Drums are probably an eastern idea introduced by the crusaders into Europe. They are frequently mentioned in accounts of the first crusade. When Edward III. of England and his queen made triumphal entry into Calais in 1347 "tabourers" were among the instruments which were played in their honor. Another of these was called a "mace" or kettle drum, taken together with its name, from the Arabs. The poet Chaucer also mentioned this instrument in his description of the tournament in "The Knight's Tale." The king generally kept a troop of these bandmen or minstrels in his employ, and we read that Edward II. on one occasion gave a sum of 60 shillings to Roger, the trumpeter; Janino, the naker, and others for their performances. Another minstrel was called the "cheveretter," or player on the bagpipe.

The Plague and the Tan Pits. Bermondsey's association with the tanning industry was originally due partly to its fine oak woods and partly to the fact that the London slaughter-houses were to a large extent situated in Southwark, on the unfashionable side of the river. For a brief period, however, it enjoyed a certain fame as a health resort. That was, as Sir Henry Trueman Wood reminds us in "Industrial England in the Eighteenth Century," when "terror-stricken creatures fled from the ravages of the great plague in the city of London to the Bermondsey tan pits to find strong medicinal virtues in the nauseous smell."

Two Thumbed Gloves.

In so cold a climate as that of Iceland the glove must be put off or on as rapidly and easily as possible, so it is made without fingers, and in order that no time may be wasted in distinguishing between right and left all gloves have two thumbs. You simply thrust your hand into the first glove that comes and your thumb immediately finds its way. There are, of course, drawbacks in the matter of appearance, for the dangling idle thumb looks untidy.—London Chronicle.

The Apocalypse.

There is no other book in the New Testament about which so much has been written and to so little purpose. Dr. South said of it, "It either finds a man mad or makes him so." It is said of Calvin that he showed his wisdom in not writing a commentary on this, as he did on other books.—Chadwick.

WOULD MODIFY "HELLO" CALL.

New Jersey Pastor Deprecates Use of Popular Signal.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Mar. 7.—The members of the Second Reformed church of White Horse, N. J., have begun a crusade against the use of the word "hello," as they declare it verges on profanity, and they have requested the telephone companies to instruct their centrals not to use it.

Rev. Harry H. Hitchcock, pastor of the church, says that thousands swear daily and do not know it by the use of the word, and he believes a ban should be put on it all over the United States. The members of his congregation are enthusiastically following him in the movement and believe that "hello" will be abandoned in a few years.

"It is an improper word, declared the preacher, 'and should be tabooed. I think it should be classed as the call of Hades, because the manner in which many pronounce it is so broad that the last letter might as well have been eliminated. It frequently passes the mouth of children who soon learn that, by putting the last letter first there is a different meaning given, and I have often heard youngsters make this reversal 'Why should we have a word in everyday use that thus spells the name of such a horrid place? Another would be just as good and less offensive to the ear. I believe that simple 'lo' would be just as convenient and answer the same purpose. I believe that the word 'dam' as applied to water should also be changed, as it reminds one too vividly of 'damn.'"
