$3.50 RECIPE CURES WEAK KIDNEYS, FREE
Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, Etc.
Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead, and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K-1491 Lack Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power. It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

GLIMPSES OF CHINA

Studies in the Life and Character of Its People and Little Known Facts About the Country.

Written for The Coos Bay Times.

A favorite way of expressing what is taking place in China is: "The Sleeping Giant of the Orient is rubbing his eyes." The figure is not inaptly chosen, except that the process has advanced beyond that of mere rubbing his eyes. He may be said to have actually awakened. It is difficult for us on this side of the waters to understand thoroughly just what that awakening means now and will mean to the world later on. Perhaps nothing of a similar nature has ever occurred, certainly not on such a large scale. The awakening of Japan was complete and her adoption of things western about as thorough as one could imagine. In China, however, with her enormous population, her vast areas and her unlimited natural resources, this fever for western civilization and learning will mean infinitely more than it did in Japan. According to John R. Mott, China has made greater progress within the past five years than any other nation in the world.

One needs to be on Chinese soil to realize the extent and the reality of this movement. A new national spirit has been kindled among the people, who catching up the slogan: "New China," "Reform," have passed it on, like the torch of old, until practically the whole nation has caught the fever. One breathes of this spirit in the very atmosphere about him. To illustrate the rapidity of the changes that are taking place the incident is related of one meeting a friend of China and asking him if there was anything new going on there. The reply was: "I have not seen the morning paper as yet." Everyday one scans the papers to see what new movement has been inaugurated, what change proposed.

This radical adjustment to foreign conditions began in the years following the war with Japan, when the young Emperor Kuang Hsu attempted to make his reign an era of reform. The reality and strength of this movement for reform was clearly seen in the utter failure of the Empress Dowager to check it. She brought on the Boxer uprising, thinking that by ridding China of all foreigners, the old conservative policy could still be adhered to. It was a severe blow to the Chinese and the foreigners alike, but in the nature of things it seemed necessary. It was but the birth-throe of a new nation. With the Boxer Uprising the doom of old China was sealed and a new and more vigorous China was born. The Manchu Dynasty, which has been ruling China for the past three centuries or more, realizes its inability to stem the tide of reform and now has well-nigh submitted to the inevitable.

To get any adequate idea of the progress of the Reform Movement, one needs to turn back a few pages to the chapter on Old China. Here he is told that China, before the spir-himself with the other, now throws himself with zest and enthusiasm into the Western sports which have found their way into almost every Chinese educational institution.

Even the young women are possessed by the spirit of reform. When they learn of the ways of western women regarding the selecting of their husbands, they find their own time-honored custom of having the parents do the selecting very objectionable. They now want the right which American and other Western girls have of choosing whom they please to be their life-associate.

The zeal for reform has touched all phases of their life, and consequently, we are not surprised at finding it in things political. The form of government for China, like other things, must be modeled after the western type. The constant cry for the past few years has been for a Parliament, wherein the people would have a voice in their own affairs, instead of having the Emperor think and act for them. Four or five years ago the Empress Dowager announced that such a parliament might be called in 1915. But this seemed too far ahead for these Western enthusiasts. The Provincial Assemblies sent a large delegation to Peking last June, with the petition that the parliament be convened at an earlier date. The request was denied, but they would not listen to it. They pledged themselves to remain in the capital and to harrass the throne until their petition was granted. It is said that some of the delegates were so much in earnest that they cut off their hands and with the flowing blood penned letters to various parts of the Empire, seeking to make the agitation for a parliament more vehement than ever. Finally an official decree was issued, stating that an imperial parliament, the first ever called in the history of China, will be convened in 1913.

It is the sphere of education that China has undergone the most radical transformation. China's old educational system is a thing of the past, being completely supplanted by the methods of the West. No one can really understand the tenor of this change until he knows how thoroughly antiquated their former methods were in this line. Their whole system was entirely out of date, by thousands of year it seems. Students were not taught to reason for themselves, to develop along original lines, but to learn everything by rote. A good essay writer, for example, was not one who brought forth some new thoughts of his own, but one who could string together in an artistic way, as many as possible of the fine sayings of their sages. The curriculum was devoid of such studies as geography, history, mathematics and the sciences. Their knowledge of things outside their own empire was woefully deficient. Some amusing examples are told to illustrate this fact. One high official, on going to Europe, brought a large quantity of salt with him, because he thought there was none there. In an argument about a coal mine, a high official at Peking spoke of growing coal, saying that its rate of growth was not very great. One man high in educational circles, asked a missionary: "Can your ships sail to the moon?" The average graduate student if asked where England, France or Germany are, would probably reply, "What is the use of knowing. I do not expect to travel." The slavish study of the classics, which, in their minds, enshrined all that was worth while to learn, was adhered to almost from the cradle to the grave. It has been said that if a Chinese scholar were to leave off studying for four consecutive years, he would find himself just where he started as a boy. In other words, he would forget how to memorize, and with this failure, his whole educational fabric would collapse.

Quite in contrast to all this has been the coming in of Western methods, which have been followed in toto; in fact, so great has been the zeal for western learning and western methods, that the conservatives have been trembling for the fate of their own classics. A Chinese youth today would a thousand times rather delve in Western lore than grind out the time-worn sentences of Confucius or Mencius. One of the greatest factors in this educational reform has been the presence of the mission school everywhere in China. These have, with few exceptions, been well managed, and their graduates, after going to foreign lands for post-graduate training have returned to their native land bringing the best that Western training could give. Today thousands of students are studying abroad. A majority of these are in Japanese schools and colleges. Hundreds of them are taking high rank among the students of America,

English and German universities. China has repeatedly sent some of her highest officials abroad to make a careful study and investigation of Western methods of instruction. These awakened ideas have been put into practice in their own schools in the way of finer buildings, better equipment, more improved methods of instruction and discipline and the taking on of Western subjects in their curricula. No doubt the zeal of the reformers was quickened a hundred-fold when an imperial decree gave sanction to the English tongue as the official language in all Chinese schools of modern learning. Not long since a Chinese prince resigned his official post to study in Germany and England, and many other students have made similar sacrifices in order to study abroad. It is no exaggeration to say that never in the history of any nation has the desire for a new learning taken so complete possession of a people as it has of the Chinese. The earliest dream of every youth, it seems, is to get a training along Western lines, and in getting it, it is a matter of little concern what become of his own classics.

China has roused from her long sleep. If her rate of progress in the next few decades is at all commensurate with that of the past decade, it certainly behooves Western nations, and especially America, to take notice and act accordingly. Japan, few in numbers, and limited in territory, is too poor at present to assert herself as she would like to do. China has all that Japan lacks. Let her become as thoroughly awakened as the Japanese have become, and then Napoleon's words will be verified: "When China is moved, it will change the face of the world."

THE IRISHMAN.

The savage loves his native shore,
Tho' rude the soil and chill the air,
Then well may Erin's sons adore
Their Isle which nature formed so fair.
What flood reflects a show so sweet,
As Shannon's great or pastoral band,
Or who a friend or foe can meet,
So generous as an Irishman?
Tho' his hand be rask, his heart is warm,
And principle is still his guide,
None more regrets a deed of harm
None more forgives with nobler pride;
He may be duped, but won't be dared;
More fit to practice than to plan,
He nobly earns his poor reward,
And spends it like an Irishman.
If poor in weal, he'll for you pay,
And guide you where you safe may be;
If you're his comrade, whilst you stay
His cottage holds a jubilee;
His inmost soul he will unlock,
And if he may your merits scan
Your confidence he seems to mock
For faithful is an Irishman.

By honor bound in woe or weal,
Whate'er she bids he dares to do,
Try him with gold, it won't prevail,
But e'en in fire you'll find him true;
He seeks not safety—let his post
Be where there's aught in danger's van;
For, if the field of fame be lost
It won't be by an Irishman.

Erin's lov'd land, from age to age,
Be thou more great, more fam'd
and free,
May peace be yours, or should you wage
Defensive wars, cheap victory,
May plenty flow in every field,
And gentle breezes sweetly fan,
May cheerful smiles serenely glide,
In the breast of every Irishman.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly drilling to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hill's Catarrh Cure is manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is a only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken in doses from 30 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and cleanses the surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.
