tising the resources of this region and bar their home." going to the expense of distributing them why not get an option on, or purchase, say 500 acres of logged of land. Then have an agent in Portland pick out the desirable emigrants that are daily arriving there and make a proposition to them enabling them to take over say twenty acres of this land at a reasonable figure and allow them to pay for it in yearly installments. In this way we would soon have our country settled up with a people who would utilize the now barren hills and make of them productive and ideal homes. It's not capital we need. It's the right kind of homeseekers. Our county is all right but we need a good class of new farming blood which would not despair of making a home on our now stump ridden hills. Farmers with capital would not do this and besides the rich farmer would not be satisfied with a twenty acre ranch. If such a proposition were made to many of the sturdy, honert, hardworking men who are now turning toward the west in search of a home "where they can make a good living and raise their families it would be eagerly grabbed up. We have the land, climate and other environment here and with a little work can soon multiply our population as California and Washington are now doing.
