KEATING'S NEW SONG.

"Roses Everywhere" Draws Parallel Unfavorable to Eden.

A Portland paper says: "J. H. Keating, who has gained prominence as a song writer under the name of Lyn Udall, has composed words and music for a song that he calls "Roses Everywhere," and which he has offered to the Rose Festival association for use during the big carnival in June.

"The melody is particularly catchy, and is said to be one of those "contagious" tunes that become popular at once with all who hear it. The words contrast the charms of the Garden of Eden, to Eden's disadvantage, with those of Portland and the beauty of other Coast towns with those of this city.

"The festival committee is considering accepting the song and having it published. It is believed that its sale would net the association a profit!

"Keating declares his song to be in a class with "Just One Girl," "Just as the Sun Went Down," "Stay in Your Own Back Yard," and others which he has composed and which have scored hits."
