NAVAL MILITIA ROW IN COURT

Portland Judge Takes Suit to Oust Capt. Reynolds Under Advisement.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 30.—Samuel White, an attorney for the defense, appeared in the circuit court to protest against having himself and the other members of the board of inquiry into naval militia affairs characterized as "ignorant and inexperienced."

George S. Shepherd, who appeared in his own behalf as attorney in the suit he has brought to oust Captain J. J. Reynolds from command of the naval militia, defended the use of the language applied to White, to Albert J. Capron and Loren A. Bowman, the members of the board of inquiry. This board declared Shepherd had failed to use good judgment. Shepherd in reply said that the members of the board did not know enough about naval matters to tell whether he used good judgment or not.

White argued that much of the matter incorporated in Shepherd's complaint has no place there and should be stricken out. After hearing the views of the attorneys Judge McGinn took the matter under advisement.

FREE NEWSPAPERS IN OKLAHOMA CITY FAIL

Streets Flooded With Copies Thrust Into Hands of Pedestrians, but Success Does Not Come.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Aug. 31.—A test of the "free newspaper" ended here last week when the Pointer and the Free Press, which for many months have made a stubborn fight for existence, were sold to C. B. Edgar, publisher of the Times. The change of ownership marks the end of a newspaper war that had been waged here for the past three years. The free papers which had been given away by the thousands, had proved a heavy financial loss of their owners, it was said.

The Pointer, probably was one of the first free papers of any magnitude ever started in this country. It established a complete plant and entered the field as victoriously as any paid paper ever did, maintaining a full staff of printers, editors and reporters and a telegraph news service. Later the Free Press was launched to oppose it. As a result, Oklahoma City had five papers and at times its streets were literally filled with free copies that had been thrust into the hands of pedestrians.

Mr. Edgar, owner of the Times, only recently bought that paper. He came to Oklahoma shortly after having made a success in the newspaper field at St. Joseph, Mo., and at other points.

BOSTON PROVES HARBOR VALUE

W. E. Mahoney Says Visit of Naval Vessel to Coos Bay Is Worth Much.

W. E. Mahoney, who does the waterfront for the Portland Oregonian, and who accompanied the Oregon Naval Militia to Coos Bay on the U. S. S. Boston had the following article in the Oregonian last Sunday: "Coos Bay's contention that it belongs well up in the list of Pacific Coast harbors no longer requires debate. Whatever misgivings have been felt by persons not familiar with that waterway, who doubted the existence of an abundance of water, not only at the entrance but for 15 miles inland, fall with the latest accomplishment of the locality's pilot contingent in navigating the cruiser Boston across the bar and up the bay to Marshfield, the head of deep-water transportation. The cruiser draws 18 1/2 feet of water, and did not so much as once disturb the sandy crust of the channel bed.

When the intention was made known to take the cruiser to Marshfield there were many skeptical ones. Even among marine men who had not sailed those waters the question was argued whether there was a sufficient depth on the bar. Nothing in the way of a naval vessel had before attempted to negotiate the entrance, except torpedo boats, which are of such light draft that they would not ground in a heavy rain, say mariners.

Navy Takes No Risks. But the Boston was different. It is commonly known that the Navy Department takes no risks in time of peace in ordering war dogs into harbors unfamiliar to the officers simply for the fun of the thing.

Coos Bay was on the Navy's list of "undesirables" for anything larger than a torpedo-boat the same as the Columbia River was once, because the government has declined to recognize the fact that when vessels of the merchant marine leave the river drawing 27 feet of water naval vessels of the same draft can be accommodated. As at Coos Bay, it was not enough that the steamer Breakwater, making a round voyage every five days, was negotiating the entrance without difficulty each time, and the steamer Napp Smith was leaving for San Francisco regularly with a cargo of 2,000,000 feet of lumber each voyage. Even the Dollar Steamship company sent one of its largest vessels there, a carrier capable of loading 4,000,000 feet on a draft of 26 feet, but the all-convincing test was, so many thought, the steaming of a deep-craft naval vessel into the bay.

Victory Is Important. Carriers of greater draft have been there, but it was the stand of the Washington authorities against naval vessels being into outside harbors that magnified the trip of the Boston. Like many other ports, Coos Bay did not always have such good water. It has required years of concerted efforts on the part of Marshfield and North Bend interests particularly to secure appropriations with which to carry on the construction of a jetty, increase the channel depth and maintain it by dredging and other labors before the shipping world would be convinced that the barrier at the entrance was a matter of history and that the district had overcome obstacles that were the same kind encountered in building harbors that are today classed as the best in the world.

TRIBUTE TO ARCHDEACON

Bishop Scadding Pays Kindly Compliment to Episcopal Minister

In his convention address Bishop Scadding paid the following tribute to Archdeacon Horsfall: At this Convention we miss the gentle presence of our dear Archdeacon of Coos and Curry Counties, Rev. William Horsfall, who has sent me word that on account of ill health he feels unable to come. What a living example he is to all of us of the true missionary spirit. He went to these coast counties twenty-two years ago. There with never tiring zeal, in the sure confidence of God's love and care, he has bravely faced all obstacles and trials, and is loved and known by all as the spiritual father of the community. The Rev. Robert Browning has been received from the Missionary District of Shanghai, and is now rector of Marshfield and serves the missions at North Bend, Empire and Gardiner. He has done much good work, and is so well supported by the people of Marshfield that the Emmanuel Church, Marshfield, has now become a self-supporting parish, and in the near future will probably erect a new church building.

TO CUT DOWN HUNTING AREA

Plan to Establish Big Game Preserves in Coos and Curry Counties.

Before another hunting season rolls around, the area over which local sportsmen may hunt will probably be considerably reduced if, present plans are carried out. State Game Warden Finley now has the matter up with a number of the large landholders of this section for the establishment of state game preserves in Coos and Curry counties and expects to close them soon. Mr. Finley came over yesterday from the Coquille valley after a trip through Curry county.

Under a law enacted at the session of the Oregon legislature, the State Game Warden is empowered to establish game preserves through the cooperation of private land holders where ever he may deem it advisable. The law provides that no birds or animals protected by the game laws may be hunted in these preserves and provides a jail sentence as well as a fine for violations. The state game warden is also empowered to appoint special deputy game wardens to guard these preserves.

The large timber owners have long complained of timber fires being due to careless camping and hunting parties. Now by throwing their holdings into a state game preserve, hunters and campers trespassing on these holdings will be subject to such severe punishment that they will no dare to enter the domains.

The state is prompted to establish these preserves to afford a haven of refuge for deer and birds. With sections or even townships here set there set aside so that their enemies the hunter, cannot follow them there, the birds and deer and other animals soon recognize these havens of refuge and gather there. Thus the extermination of the wild game is greatly reduced. Of course varmints may be killed in the game preserves.

A number of the big land holders of Coos and Curry county are expected to throw their holdings into game preserves. Of course, Game Warden Finley will not accept all of it. Probably will the major portion of it. The land-holders lose nothing but turning it into the preserve and from the loss of the right to hunt of it and in turn receive the state's added protection against trespassers.

CURE FOR SALMON DOGS.

Prof. E. F. Pernot, bacteriologist to the Oregon state board of health has discovered the germ that causes dogs to die when they eat salmon. When salmon have been in fresh water for some time, small organisms known as amoeba attach themselves to the back of the fish, and these organisms will poison dogs, but do not poison the fish. Doses of calcium in quantities of two grains if given soon after the dog is taken are considered a sure cure. Prof. Pernot discovered that salmon from the sea did not poison dogs that ate the flesh. This led to further discovery that dogs were poisoned after eating salmon from the sea when the salmon had been in fresh water of the rivers for some time.
