

MISSING MAN IS DROWNED

Body of J. L. Magness of Portland Found—Two Other Rose City Men Missing

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 4.—Floating with face up—turned in the river beside houseboat No. 17, at the Oregon Yacht club lagoon, just north of the Oaks, the body of J. Lloyd Magness, missing cashier of the baggage department at the Union Depot, was found with no signs of violence upon it and with a watch and a small sum of money in the pockets of his clothes. He had been missing a little over four days and the body was recovered within two days of the time set for his wedding.

A feature of the case is that the discovery was made by Henry Ritchie, agent for a life insurance company, who a few months ago issued a policy upon Magness. The circumstances found about the body have been accepted by all concerned as showing accidental death, perhaps brought about by a vertigo arising from the violent headaches to which the man was subject. The place where the body was discovered is nearly on a right line inshore from the dredge where his canoe was found entangled in the moorings.

J. Lloyd Magness, after telephoning to Miss Nina Joy, daughter of Councilman Joy, and his intended bride, that he had a headache and was going for a row in an effort to overcome it dropped out of sight Tuesday evening.

Hotel Man Missing.

Mental aberration, which causes him to wander about the city, is the reason of the disappearance of Charles W. Jones, assistant manager of the Oregon Hotel, it is believed by the party that searched for the missing man. The private papers and business affairs of Jones were thoroughly investigated. Nothing was found that would indicate a motive for Jones leaving Portland.

Louvre Cafe Man Gone.

More profound at every turn grows the mystery shrouding the disappearance of Theodore E. Kruse, wealthy cafe and hotel-owner of this city, who vanished on the morning of August 21. With all his financial affairs in excellent shape and with those who have had business or social relations with him speaking highly of him as a methodical, exact and sober-minded man, his friends are dumbfounded at the unusual circumstances of the case.

Henry Cress, a Portland resident of 23 West Humboldt avenue, called at the Louvre Restaurant and said that he had seen Kruse in Seattle, at the Rathskeller, at 5 p. m., August 22, the day after Mr. Kruse telegraphed from Seattle to Mrs. Kruse in Portland. He said Mr. Kruse was in the company of a tall, slender man

LABOR DAY IS NOT OBSERVED

No program or Exercises For Holiday on Coos Bay Today—Banks Close.

Today is Labor Day but aside from the banks closing and the postoffice observing holiday hours, there was no particular observance of it on Coos Bay. Few of the unions aside from the longshoremen maintain a local branch here and to this fact was probably due the failure to have a program.

West's Proclamation.

Governor West's Labor Day proclamation was as follows:

"Whereas, The Legislature of the state of Oregon has set apart and appointed the first Monday in September of each year as Labor Day, and has declared the same to be a public holiday, and,

"Whereas, Labor in all its scope and meaning is the cornerstone and foundation upon which rests the solid and enduring prosperity, growth and advancement of our state and nation, and

"Whereas, It is fitting and just that we pause occasionally in the midst of our varied activities and give a thought to the potency, meaning and honor of conscientious and useful toil.

"Now, therefore, I, Oswald West, Governor of the state of Oregon, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, to hereby proclaim Monday, September 4, 1911, as Labor Day, and I do hereby recommend that it be so observed within the borders of the state, wherever possible, by the cessation of business, both public and private and by the observance of fitting ceremonies by citizens everywhere; and I would further recommend that flags be displayed upon all public buildings in recognition of that honor justly due to all those who labor for the progress and good of this, our magnificent commonwealth."

ON NOVEL TRIP AROUND WORLD

C. N. McLean Who Claims to Have Sustained Broken Neck on Wager Tour.

C. N. McLean of Kansas City, Mo., one of the few men who have recovered from a broken neck and is able to be about, is now at The Chandler. He claims to be on a novel trip, traveling on a wager involving $25,000.

Eleven years ago, he alleges he sustained a broken neck in Kansas City. His recovery and especially the regaining of ability to walk and be around without even the use of crutches is one of the marvels of medical annals. The effects of his injury is noticeable from his bearing, being compelled to hold his head in a half stooping posture.

The wager on which he now claims to be traveling was the result of a controversy among Kansas City men as to the possibilities of advertising among the various classes of people. He is to tour 1,000 of the principal cities and points of interest in North America, South America, Europe, Asia and Australia. He is to take orders for souvenir cards to be sent from the various places to people in the places he has already visited and at the same time compile a book from his experiences.

and also a heavy-set man. He simply noticed Mr. Kruse in passing as the party was entering the restaurant and had no conversation with him.

Since sending the telegram from Seattle, absolutely no other clue which might lead to the discovery of his whereabouts has been unearthed.

LOVE DIVORCE CASE DECIDED

Decree Refused Former Wealthy New York Broker by Baker City Judge.

BAKER, Ore., Sept. 4.—With a ruling to the effect that the bonds of matrimony now existing between the plaintiff and defendant shall not be and are not dissolved, and that the suit shall be dismissed, Circuit Court Judge William Smith settled the famous divorce suit of Sidney C. Love, the ex-millionaire Chicago and New York clubman and broker, against his wife, Marjorie Burnes Love, conceded the most beautiful woman in America.

In his finding of fact, Judge Smith, all the way through, finds in favor of the plaintiff, Love, but evidently his reason for not granting the decree is shown in paragraph 16, wherein he states that since he left England on September 27, 1909, Love has not sought reconciliation with his wife in unmistakable terms, has not provided a home or sought to relieve her mind with reference to the future, and has not created a condition such as his wife would accept, without thinking that she would hazard her own happiness by so doing.

In a lengthy opinion, the Judge points out that the pride of the defendant was broken after the loss of his fortune and that he was entitled to more consideration from the members of his family than the evidence shows he received.

He takes a fling at Mrs. Love's claim that her husband was a gambler, when by her own testimony it was shown that she had purchased a gambling outfit for him, paying $1,000 for it.

He also treats lightly her claim that she tried to divert his mind from drink in the immoral pastime of gambling.

"If they really loved each other," he said, "no quarrel over such a trivial matter as the baby's food could have separated them."

"Don't be ashamed to do anything that will improve your personal appearance," is Lillian Russel's advice to women. Ever met a woman who needed urging of that kind?
