I. S. SMITH UNDERGOES OPERATION AT CORVALLIS

Well-Known Marshfield Man Suffers Sudden Attack—Reported Improving Now.

I. S. Smith, a well-known Marshfield man who has been spending the summer with his family at Corvallis, was taken suddenly ill of appendicitis one day last week and had to undergo an emergency operation. While he was very ill for a few days after the operation, he was recuperating Tuesday when Mrs. Smith wrote to Mr. Dindinger of the Bazar. Last Friday morning, Mr. Smith left home about 8 o'clock apparently in excellent health. He was to be gone all day. About 6 o'clock Mrs. Smith received a telephone from the hospital stating that Mr. Smith was there critically ill of appendicitis and that an emergency operation would have to be performed. This was done and for a day or two, his condition was serious but later an improvement began. That he is now on the road to recovery will be gratifying news to his many friends on the Bay.
