A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE.

IN THE Woman's Home Companion a widowed mother tells of how she allowed her daughters to become self-supporting and then found herself miserable because they no longer were dependent upon her. She found consolation in marrying a college professor and expressed the hope that the would never be a success in order that he might need her always.

"A woman like me simply has to be necessary to someone," declared the disappointed mother. Her attitude fortunately, is an unusual one. Most mothers have about them an element of self-sacrifice which makes them wish the greatest possible success and happiness for their children regardless of the heartaches it may mean to find them growing out from under the parental care.

"I know I can't keep her always and I want her to do the things she is interested in," has been the brave and half tearful renunciation which has marked more than one college girl's departure from the precious shelter of her home. It is sometimes a legitimate question whether or not we are giving our girls the greatest ultimate happiness by making them entirely independent, but the selfish demand that they be kept at home in order that their mothers may have the satisfaction of being necessary to someone, is a plea not frequently heard.

It is a mother's fate to suffer from the severance of ties which the very nature of her being make necessary and unavoidable. And to their everlasting credit it may be said, most mothers are equal to the sacrifice. In the tender endowment of love they have also received a large measure of that unselfish benevolence and great-hearted care for humanity as a race and an institution, a care which moves them to surrender the dearest joys of individual possession for the larger cause of universal benefit.

A small piece of black court plaster, when placed on a woman's cheek who has a pretty white skin, is said to add to her beauty. But a black eye doesn't have the same effect.

ELK SLAYER SOUGHT.

Reward of $100 Offered For Curry County Offender.
PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 14.—For the purpose of apprehending the hunters who killed an elk near Gold Beach recently, State Game Warden Finley has instructed F. M. Morgan, deputy warden at Gold Beach that $100 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the guilty persons. Mr. Finley considers that the offense is particularly grave, for the reason that the animal was killed for the skin and horns, the carcass being left to decompose.

A Great Advantage to Working Men
J. A. Maple, 125 S. 7th St., Steubenville, O., says: "For years I suffered from weak kidneys and a severe bladder trouble. I learned of Foley Kidney Pills and their wonderful cures so I began taking them and sure enough I had as good results as any I heard about. My backache left me and to one of my business, ex-grocerman, that alone is a great advantage. My kidneys acted free and normal, and that saved me a lot of misery. It is now a pleasure to work where it used to be a misery. For Sale at Red Cross Drug Store."

Francis H. Clarke

What they reveal.

Dim forms steal softly to and fro
Like phantoms drear;
Bright stars but for a moment glow,
Then disappear.

Along the mazy aisles of gloom,
In cold despair,
My feet seem wandering to a doom—
I know not where—

And if perchance some pitfall near
Shall open deep,
I'll heed not, care not, shall not fear,
But downward leap."

Mr. Clarke's domestic life was a model of purity and uprightness. During all of the long weary hours he spent in his labors upon affairs of momentous consequence to the public and which sapped him of his vitality, his love for his family was constantly with him. To one who frequently visited his home as a friend it seemed that there never existed a more perfect home—a home in which more love and harmony dwelt—a home in which there was more mutual devotion. He loved his home and his family.

When the last moment came for him and he realized that the transition was at hand—when he stood face to face with the grim specter, Death, he met it all bravely and with a smile said, "I want to go to my wife."

Francis Herbert Clarke was born in Worcester, Massachusetts on March 28, 1859. He died in Portland, Oregon, on September 11, 1911. He was married to Katherine Fernholz of St. Paul, Minnesota, on December 24, 1890. To this union there were born five children.—Chauncey F., Sydney B., Adelaide J., Virginia F. and Perry King. His wife and all his children survive him.

His early education was secured in the schools of Massachusetts in the vicinity of Salem. During the early part of his life he began the study of law in Salem, Massachusetts, and was shortly afterwards admitted to the bar of that state. After practicing in the courts of Massachusetts for some time where he won distinction because of his ability and eloquence he removed to St. Paul, Minnesota in 1883. In 1885, he removed from St. Paul to the Black Hills country and became a resident of Rapid City, South Dakota. Here he remained until 1891, when he again moved to St. Paul. During his entire business life he was actively engaged in the practice of law and was well and very favorably known as a lawyer throughout the entire country. He has handled many cases of note during his life-time and with his keen perceptiveness and eloquence has been extraordinarily successful. During this time he also took a very active interest in politics and worked hard for the principles of political economy in which he believed. At one time in St. Paul, because of his known integrity and reform ideas, he received the endorsement of three of the political parties for congressman. About this time, however, he fell ill with typhoid fever and was unable to take any part in the campaign. He received an extraordinary vote in the election in spite of his absence.

One of his greatest pleasures in life was the study of literature. He took great pleasure in writing and has produced some master-pieces of literary excellence, among which are found both prose and poetical gems. In 1909 he gave to the people his latest work entitled, "Morgan Rockefeller's Will." In this work he has endeavored to combine the great fortunes of Morgan and Rockefeller in a gift to the American people and to by so doing replace the chaotic condition of the present commercial system by a system of fraternity.

He has also been actively engaged in work connected with the construction of railroads during his life, having at one time spent considerable time upon railroad work in South America.

In 1907 he again moved from St. Paul to Marshfield, Oregon, where he has since resided. Since coming to Oregon, his entire heart has been thrown into the development questions of Coos Bay and he has worked incessantly for its upbuilding. He was a firm believer in the future of Oregon and particularly of the Coos Bay country, and has at all times been engaged in furthering its interests. He secured the passage of the law which has enabled Coos Bay to have a Port Commission.

In 1909 he formed a law partnership with Robert O. Graves and has since that time given nearly all of his attention and labor to the construction of what is now known as the Coos Bay and Oregon Central railroad. His railroad work was just nearing accomplishment when death came and he did not live to see the results of his years of hard labor.

Francis H. Clarke has gone. He has been removed from our midst by death—the thing which he feared least of all. He called death a mere transition and he approached the end with the same spirit of willingness with which he entered into the battles of life.

With heavy hearts we mingle our tears with those of his sorrowing family but we find consolation in knowing that in him was one of the highest types of noble, unselfish characters and that such a spirit—his spirit—still lives.
