RAINFALL AND PARASITES

DR. C. M. SCHULZ, COOS COUNTY PIONEER AND BEAR HUNTER WRITES INTERESTING ARTICLE IN SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

Dr. C. M. Schultz, who resided at Ten Mile in the nineties and who sold the present site of Lakeside to C. M. Byler, is a contributor to a recent issue of the Scientific American on experiences in Coos county. He is now located at Tacoma, Wash., where he is a member of the city health department.

Dr. Schultz is well remembered by many Coos Bay people for while a resident of Ten Mile his reputation for hospitality became proverbial and his knowledge of medicine was often of great benefit to neighbors in the pioneer days.

A story is still told on him to bear hunters in the Ten Mile country. He was wandering about in the woods there and found an old bear in a hollow log. He had neither gun nor hunting knife but he was anxious to get the bear. He finally thought of his medicine case in which there was a hypodermic syringe. Loading the syringe to the limit, he got to an opening in the log and soon Bruit was in a comatose condition from the big dose of morphine. Dr. Schultz then lugged the sleeping bear out of the log and carried it home where a knife was obtained and the bear's throat cut to prevent brain coming out from under the influence of the drug and causing trouble. The bear was dressed and to Dr. Schultz belongs the unusual honor of capturing a full grown bear without gun or knife.

But here is the contribution he has in the Scientific American which will be of interest to many Coos county people:

Rainfall and Parasites.

To the Editor of the Scientific American:

On page 391, issue of June 24th, you publish an article, "Rainfall and Parasites."

I am a veterinarian, with a penchant to investigation of subjects relating to my branches. These parasites require humidity, often ground covered with water, to go through the different stages of their complicated life-cycle, is well known and understood. It is unfortunate that careful statistics are not kept in this country regarding the increased loss from this source, and we must refer to European statistics to study this problem.

Some years ago Dr. Hutchison, meat inspector at Portland, Oregon, by careful observation found out that cattle and sheep from overflow districts where carp were numerous, were free from liver flukes (Distomum hepaticum or Fasciola hepatica). The carp is a good scavenger, and destroyed the flukes during their water stage or destroyed the water snails that were the hosts, during a certain period of the Cercariae.

In the nineties I was in practice on the coast of Oregon, in Coos county. There we suffered losses from Distomum hepaticum, especially after wet seasons, when the bottom lands had been under water and were used as pasture soon afterward. Lungworms also killed many sheep and calves. The life-cycle of flaria pulmonalis is not known.

After many experiments—attempts to cure the affected animals—it occurred to me that to prevent would be more rational. Clean the pastures. How?

Ducks, geese. A flock of ducks and geese will go over a good deal of ground, and destroy all forms of animal life. No doubt large tracts could not be "cleaned out" in this manner, but I remembered two ranches on which, after two years of systematic running of ducks, the calves remained healthy, and the sheep were free from lungworms. This latter fact was noteworthy, because the life-cycle of this parasite has not been worked out.

Some years ago, when at the veterinary department of the University of Pennsylvania, I mentioned these facts to Prof. C. F. Marshall, and he fully indorsed my statements, although he had never had opportunity to put the idea to actual test.

The keeping of water fowl, especially ducks, is indicated in game reserves. Ravages of Distomum hepaticum among elk, moose, deer, are common, and the ponds are infested before we know the cause and the losses appear. But if some quarters are provided for ducks and swans and geese (they may be ornamental, although Indian runners are best) and their breeding favored, they will destroy many injurious forms of life that—no doubt about it—are necessary to permit a complete life-cycle of several parasites. This has been worked out in the life-cycle of the flukes (water snails—Cercariae); observations that I made during several years led me to assume that the same means also prohibit the development of strongylus filaria and similar parasites (ovis pulmonalis) in sheep and cattle and hogs.

Would you tell me from what paper of Prof. M. G. Moussu your article "Rainfall and Parasites" is a resume?

At present I am on the staff of the local department of health and sanitation, and am therefore interested in rational prophylactic measures. I always read your valuable publications. Tacoma, Wash.

PORT ORFORD NEWS.

Events in That Section as Recorded in The Tribune.

F. A. Stewart has exchanged his homestead and beach mines at Ophir to Harvey James for property in Bandon and a satisfactory balance. Mr. James thus secures the best beach in Oregon and a valuable place, and home. Mr. James was raised in Coos county, and has a fine family, comprising a wife and five children, who will all be a valuable accession to the community.

The Forester's trail from the Elk river station down Elk river is completed, and another trail of much more importance will at once be constructed by Forester Milbury from Elk river to Dry creek which empties into Sixes at Jamieson's place. It will, no doubt, follow closely the old pioneer trail between the two streams, and will help many settlers by a much shorter route to reach Port Orford.

Mrs. F. A. Stewart was the recipient of a present from C. H. Pearce last week, which she, and all members of the Tribune family highly appreciate as a souvenir of tender associations. It is a mallet made of the axle of the first wagon ever in Gold Beach or Curry county. It was brought across the plains by John Dewey, Mrs. M. Riley's father, was afterwards owned for many years by Hon. M. Riley, father of Mrs. Stewart. It was for many years an object of curiosity to the pioneer children who are now venerable with gray hairs, but have never forgotten the rides they enjoyed in the famous old wagon.

ARMY FLYER "AIRSICK" IN HEAVY CLOUDBANK

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 14.—Captain Paul M. Beck, of the Army aviation school at College Park, Md., told of his remarkable experience when he became lost in the clouds in his biplane while flying from College Park to Annapolis. The aviator, 14,000 feet in the air, suddenly found himself enveloped in a dense cloud. The pressure of air currents was such that Captain Beck's craft rocked as a boat would in a rough sea and he was seized with a feeling akin to seasickness. He felt himself losing control of the machine which fell 500 feet. This brought him out of the clouds and he regained his equilibrium.

A Great Advantage to Working Men
J. A. Maple, 125 S. 7th St., Steubenville, O., says: "For years I suffered from weak kidneys and a severe bladder trouble. I learned of Foley Kidney Pills and their wonderful cures so I began taking them and sure enough I had as good results as any I heard about. My backache left me and to one of my business expressions, that alone is a great advantage. My kidneys acted free and normal, and that saved me a lot of misery. It is now a pleasure to work where it used to be a misery. For Sale at Red Cross Drug Store."
