EVENING STORIES AND TALES FOR THE LITTLE PEOPLE

(All Rights Reserved)

THIS WEEK'S MOTTO "I will not be selfish."

GOOD EVENING.

Good evening, little girls and boys. I am very glad to see you smile instead of frown for I know that you are happy and thankful for what you have.

This is indeed a beautiful world, and I believe that most of you know it, yet there are a few to be found among you who are thankful for what they have and who are always finding fault with their playmates, and every thing and every one about them. I know that from this time on you will not be that kind of boys and girls.

If your playmate is quarrelsome and selfish and wants everything his own way, just feel sorry for him and feel glad, O! so glad, that you are not like him. No one likes a selfish child. By "selfish child" I mean one who wants everything his own way—one who always thinks of himself first.

Well, let's all be good friends, and after you have learned the little lessons, I will tell you some stories.

LITTLE LESSONS.

Lesson I.

I am happy and thankful because I have my parents, my sisters and my brothers.

Lesson II.

Little boys must always wash their hands and faces clean, and comb their hair before going to the table to eat.

Lesson III.

Little girls and boys must never contradict older persons, or talk while older persons are talking.

Lesson IV.

Little boys should always tip their hats to little girls and ladies.

The Naughty Teddy Bear.

Mrs. Bear was very busy one day doing her spring house cleaning. It seemed to her that everything in the house was dirty. Papa Bear often told her that if she would have her own, Teddy Bear, pick up his playthings, and help her, her work would not be so hard. "We must not allow him to become a lazy little bear," he said.

Just as she was beating the dust out of a rug, little Teddy Bear came running up crying, "O! Mother, I'm hurt, I'm hurt." If Mama Bear had not known that it was Teddy's voice, she would never have known him. His face was so swollen and just as red as it could be. "What has happened to you, my son, and where have you been? You know that I do not allow you to run away?"

"I was helping Uncle Grizzly Bear get some of Farmer Jones' honey, and the bees got mad at me, and O! I'm hurt! I'm hurt!" As soon as Mama Bear had bathed the swollen face with cold water, she said: "This is your punishment for stealing honey. Uncle Grizzly Bear will soon hear what I have to say about such work."

... The Bee and the Butterfly. ... A bee and a butterfly met one day. "Good morning, Mr. Butterfly, why are you so happy this morning?" asked the bee. "I'm happy because I have been given such a beautiful pair of wings," the butterfly said.

"Now when the boys and girls see me they say: 'Ah! look at that beautiful butterfly. Only a short time ago they said 'see that ugly worm crawling along,' and they seemed to want to kill me because I was then a worm and had to crawl. Now I have been given this beautiful pair of wings and can fly instead of crawling. Wouldn't you be happy too?"

"Of course I would," said the bee, "but I don't understand what you mean."

"I suppose it does seem strange to you," replied the butterfly. "I am in a hurry now, but when I have more time, I will tell you how the change came about."

(This story will be continued next Saturday.)

BILLIE BLYNKIN'S DREAMS

The following are some of the dreams of little Billie Blynkins:

The Magic Flowers.

It was not long after Billie's mother had tucked him in bed until he was in the Land of Nod. Something gave him a peck on the hand, and looking around he saw the largest black-bird he had ever seen in his life. He had been through many city parks with his mother and had seen all kinds of birds and animals but this one beat anything he had ever seen, and to his surprise it began to talk to him. "Good morning, Billie Blynkins," said the huge bird. "I have come to take you to visit a fairy friend of mine who lives in a beautiful garden filled with magic flowers. You just get on my back and do not be afraid for I will see that nothing harms you, Billie."

Billie was soon seated comfortably on the black-bird's back and away they flew. Now Billie had ridden on trains, bicycles, street cars, horses, in automobiles, carriages and he had even shot the chutes and looped the loops in the city parks but never before had he had such a glorious ride as this one. Over house-tops, over trees, on and on they went. Billie had often wished that he could go up in a balloon and he wondered if this was anything like it. Now they came to a white iron gate with large trees on either side. The gate was opened by a little girl with golden curls and blue eyes, and just think! this little girl's dress was made of flowers—beautiful lilies of the valley. The ride was great sport for Billie, but the sight that met his eyes now was better than anything yet. Here he was in a garden full of all kinds of pretty flowers which filled the air with perfume.

The bird now led him to the fairy who was seated on a large white wax lily playing a harp. "I have brought Billie Blynkins to see your garden," said the bird. "You told me to choose only good boys to visit you, and I am told that Billie is very good,—that he is very kind to animals of all kinds, that he never tells a lie and never ties tin cans to dogs' tails, nor sticks his fingers in the cream."

The fairy showed Billie through her garden and picked a bunch of flowers for him. "Now, Billie Blynkins, put these in a vase and when you have a wish, go to the flowers and touch them and your wish will be granted you."

After they had spent an hour among the flowers, Billie asked the bird to take him home. He slipped upstairs to his little room and put the flowers in a vase as the fairy had told him to do. The first thing he asked for was a bicycle. Oh! how long he had wanted one, and then in the twinkling of an eye, a fine new bicycle, just the kind he wanted appeared before him. Now for a spin down the avenue. As he rode along meeting his playmates, he wondered if any other boy was ever so happy. Just as he was about to take a little friend for a ride on his handle bars, he heard, "Billie, O. Billie, you must get right up. It is eight o'clock and you will be late for school." He raised up in bed to rub his eyes and Oh! Oh! the bicycle was gone. "Well," thought Billie, as he rubbed his eyes to get real wide awake, "if it was only a dream, I had a mighty fine time while it lasted."

(Billie's dream will be continued next Saturday.)

PORT ORFORD NEWS

News of Interest From the Western City in Curry County.

The following items of interest appear in the Port Orford Tribune:
Ed and Steve Gallier, of Bandon, and C. Carter, of Myrtle Point, came down to Port Orford Sunday on business and returned next day.

Prof. Kent, who is teaching at Bandon, came down to Port Orford with his wife and spent the Fourth of July and the rest of the week with their old Wyoming friends.

A. Barrows and wife (nee Miss Hemlock) and their daughter and son and Mr. and Mrs. Gates, of Bandon, spent their Fourth of July at Agate Beach camping on the delightful picnic grounds at the mouth of Port Orford Lake.

Gold Beach is proud of the record made the past year in the schools. The entire eighth grade passed, one of the class ranking fourth in the state and the entire seventh grade passed to the eighth grade in most of the subjects, three of the seventh grade students only failed to secure eighth grade diplomas by two or three subjects and were conditioned until September.

GOLD BEACH NEWS

Doings of the People at County Seat of Curry County.

The Gold Beach Globe gives the following news of that locality:
Trotting for salmon has now commenced. A 45-pound salmon was caught last Sunday which is only the first of hundreds that will be caught in this way by the lovers of this kind of sport.

After about seven years' absence, Mrs. Ellen Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Colvin, returned for a summer's visit with relatives and friends in this vicinity.

In a run away accident which occurred at the ranch above Wedderburn, Hubert Bronzelet received injuries which were first thought would prove fatal. Dr. Schlemann was called to dress the wound and found the man suffering from a badly bruised face but otherwise uninjured.

The Gold Beach-Wedderburn Fourth of July celebration has passed into history as one of the greatest and grandest successes of its kind ever attempted in Curry County. From the first salute in the early morning of the 4th until midnight of the 5th there was just one round of continual pleasure, save the sad and untimely death of Wm. Nordberg.
