EVENING STORIES AND TALES FOR THE LITTLE PEOPLE

(All Rights Reserved)

THIS WEEK'S MOTTO

"I will do all I can to help mother."

LITTLE LESSONS.

Girls and boys, you must be very thoughtful of mother, for just think what she does for you.

First—Who hears your prayers at night, and tucks you in bed?

Second—Who calls you in the morning and has a nice warm breakfast ready for you?

Third—Who gets you ready for school and sees that you start in time?

Fourth—For whom do you first look when you come home from school?

Fifth—Who washes and irons your clothes, or sees that they are kept clean for you?

Sixth—Who bakes the bread, pies, cakes and cookies that you like so well?

Seventh—Who prepares all of your meals for you and keeps your home neat and clean so that it is a good place to be?

What do you do for mother?

Do you help care for little brother or sister?

Do you pick up your playthings when you have finished playing?

Do you hang up your clothes and put your shoes in their place when you change them?

Do you carry in the wood, or help mother with the dishes?

Do you make your own bed and help mother care for your room?

Do you do all of these things willingly because you wish to help mother who does so much for you?

THE BIRD'S NEST.

One day while Tommy was climbing trees in the old orchard, he found a bird's nest with three of the prettiest, tiniest eggs he had ever seen. He was very much excited, and putting the nest in his hat, he ran in to mother to show her what he had found.

His mother looked very unhappy, and Tommy wondered why.

"I did not think that my little boy would rob a mother bird of her little home. How would you like for some one to destroy your home while you were away? Now this little bird has not hired a carpenter to build her house as we do, but had built it all by herself. She has carried it, hair by hair, and twig by twig, and woven these together with her bill. Do you remember how Mrs. Hen's eggs turned into baby chickens? Now, the mother bird will be heart-broken, for she, like Mrs. Hen, is looking forward to the time when her little eggs will turn into baby birds."

"I did not mean to harm the nest or eggs, or make the mother bird unhappy either," said Tommy, so he ran as fast as he could to put the nest just where he had found it. He fastened it securely where it had been, and went back into the house. Every day he went to the orchard and climbed the tree to see if the bird eggs had hatched.

One day as he started to climb the tree, he heard, "Chirp! chirp! chirp!" and when he looked into the nest, there were three funny little birds. Oh, but they were funny, and ugly, too. Why, they all had their mouths wide open, and they didn't have a feather. "Do you suppose they will ever be pretty like the mother,—those homely little things?" said Tommy to himself. He climbed down and sat on a stump nearby.

The little birdies kept making that funny noise. Presently the mamma bird came. She had something in her mouth. It was a fish worm.

So soon as she gave her babies the worm, they quit crying.

"I know now," thought Tommy, "they had their mouths open for something to eat, and they were crying for their mamma."

THE BEE AND THE BUTTERFLY.

A few days later, the butterfly found the bee on a flower. "Now," said the bee, "I want you to tell me how you were changed from a worm to a butterfly."

"Alright, Mr. Bee, I have more time now and so will tell you all that I know about it." "Before I tell you this, I want to ask you what you are doing on that flower. I am getting honey," replied the bee. "I will tell you all about how I gather the honey some time, but now let me hear about yourself."

"As I told you before," said the butterfly, "once I was only a worm. I was always afraid that some bird would carry me home for lunch, or that somebody would step on me. I managed to keep out of danger for a long time by hiding behind leaves and branches. One day after I had eaten all the nice fresh leaves that I wanted, I began to feel sleepy. I wanted a nice bed than the bed I had been having so set about to make one for myself. I began to weave a nice little hammock for myself out of the very best of silk. After I had started the hammock, I fastened it to a twig and then thought best to cover it all over. I crawled inside and made a nice little room for myself. I then went to sleep. People called my little room a "cocoon." While I rested there, these beautiful wings grew.

After I had been in my little house for a long time, I became wide awake and longed for the sunshine and flowers. I broke my house open and rolled out into the sunshine and then with these beautiful wings I fluttered away in the breeze just as you see me—all made over. Before I was a worm, I was an egg, so you see I have changed from an egg to a worm and from a worm to a butterfly.

BILLIE BLYNKIN'S DREAMS.

The Black Bear.

Billie Blynkins found himself up in a big tree, trying very hard to keep out of the clutches of a big, black bear.

It is no wonder that Billie was trying to keep away from the bear as he had spent the whole afternoon at a circus watching the different animals perform. He liked to watch the bears and their cubs. By "cubs" I mean the baby bears. He thought the bears and their cubs the cutest of all the animals, and he had watched the bears nearly all the afternoon so as I told you before, he now found himself up in a tree looking down on the great black bear. "Come on down, Billie," said the bear. "I like little boys and I will not harm you." "I know you," replied Billie, "you are like the wolf with Little Red Riding Hood. You are thinking what a fine dish I will make for you, and you are using your smooth tongue to get me in your clutches. No, thank you, Mr. Bear. I will stay right here where I am."

"Then you will have a long, long stay," replied the bear, "for I am not going away until you come down. You will die up there of hunger and that."

"I would rather do that," replied Billie, "than to be eaten by a hungry old bear."

Billie made himself as comfortable as possible and prepared to wait until some one came to look for him, or until the bear went away. The minutes seemed hours to the little boy. He could see the birds flying home to their babies. He could hear the cow bells ringing as the cows were going home, and he knew that night was coming. Everything and everybody were going home, and he was so hungry, and shivering from fright.

When it was almost dark, he heard some one say, "Who? Who? Who?" and Oh, how glad he was. Some one had come to look for him. "It's Billie Blynkins, and I am up in this tree," said Billie. Looking up in the branches above him, Billie saw an owl, and then he knew who had been calling, "Who, Who, Who." It was to much and Billie began crying, "brave as he was. What was that he heard! It was some one snoring. He looked down and saw that the bear was sound asleep. This was his chance, and very quickly he slid down the tree and ran for home as fast as his legs would carry him. "Billie, Oh! Bill, is that you?" said Papa. "What are you doing in our room?" "There was a big, black bear after me, and I want to get into your bed," said Billie.

FOR HUMAN OR ANIMAL FLESH

A remedy that is equally efficacious in healing the wounds, sores, sprains or other ailments of the flesh of man or beast.

BALLARD'S SNOW LINIMENT

A healing remedy to effectively meet the needs of animal flesh need not be a harsh, strong mixture, too drastic for the human body; Ballard's Snow Liniment is proof of this. It ranks with the best of the fresh healing remedies designed for man; and it is equally as prompt in curing the wounds and flesh diseases common among animals. Owners of blooded horses prefer it to any other liniment because it leaves no disfiguring scars in any of the minor accidents or ailments. It heals by a mild power to which the flesh of horses responds readily.

It is of great value in healing harness galls, barbed wire cuts, wounds, festering sores and many other ailments to which horses are subject. In the relief of human suffering, it has done a world of good, particularly in easing the pains of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica and lumbago. When gently rubbed in where the pain exists, it gives a most gratifying relief to the afflicted. As a household remedy for cuts, burns, bruises, sprains, contracted muscles, stiff neck, frost bites, swellings, chills, blains, ivy poisoning, there is nothing better on earth.

Put Up in Three Sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00 per Bottle.
