MAIDEN'S HEART
Her heart was most erratic;
It fluttered 'neath her lace,
And when she first beheld him
It flew into her face—
Unfurled a crimson banner
And flung it north and south,
Then as he came to meet her
It jumped into her mouth.

While riding in a taxi
She thought she saw his coat
Beside a girl with orchids—
The heart went to her throat.
Her pretty eyes of purple
Began with tears to fill,
And while he gently kissed her,
Behold! the heart stood still.

Of course this little maiden
Was foolish you perceive,
To let him view it wounded
And bleeding on her sleeve.
But as he reassured her,
She laughed with gay surprise,
Then murmuring with gladness,
It settled in her eyes.

And straight into his keeping
This little heart, alack!
Went then and there, without a paus,
And never more came back.

NEW YORK TIMES

A COLLEGE president who was lecturing on the type of girl who succeeds, and the type of girl who fails, declared that one of the most common members of that latter class is the girl who always tries to blame anything untoward that happens to her, upon some one else. This kind of girl, he said, if she was passing through a gate and there was nobody in sight, and she should tear her gown, would still think that the accident was somebody's fault.

We all know people like that—people who regard every unfortunate happening in the home or outside of it as somebody's fault, and are perfectly frantic if they can not find some one to blame for anything that disturbs or inconveniences them.

When anything disagreeable occurs, these folks immediately let off steam by blaming some one, and when, as sometimes happens, the disagreeable occurrence can not really be traced to anyone, these people become absolutely explosive with pent up blame.

For instance, in an office in which I once worked says Ruth Cameron, the head man was of this type. One summer day when all the windows were open as a matter of course, the whole office force happened to be out of the room. One girl was at dinner, by his permission; another had gone downstairs with him to take down an important interview; and office boy had been sent on an errand. During this period a quick summer shower came up and some important papers were injured by the rain. It was really impossible for that man to blame anyone for this unfortunate happening, and we almost feared that his pent up irritation would do him physical injury.

In all too many households, where some member of the family have this desire to blame some one for everything that troubles them, the patient mother is the scapegoat of every accident and every irritation.

“Why wasn't the telephone answered today?” demands the son of the family. “I tried six times to get the house, and they told me you didn't answer. It's too bad, mother. I don't see any use in our having a telephone if you can't answer it.” Whereupon the patient Mrs. Griselda attempts to palliate her son's irritation by explaining that it was the maid's afternoon out, that her daughter was making candy in the kitchen, and that she herself had gone out on an errand for father.

A great many things happen in this world that are nobody's fault—some things just plain happen, and others are unfortunate accidents or mistakes. It is a relief to have some one to blame when any of these things irritates one, but a relief of which only selfish and unjust people avail themselves; and in the truly generous person's dictionary “fault” is an entirely obsolete word; the words “mistake,” or “accident” have quite taken its place.

FAREWELL

Mrs. Henry Sengstacken on Wednesday was hostess at a farewell for Mrs. M. C. Horton who will leave shortly for Poplar Bluff, Mo., to make her home. The affair was one of the most elaborate of the season and the only thing that detracted from one of the most enjoyable afternoons was the thought of Mrs. Horton's departure from the circle of friends in which she has endeared herself. The beautiful Sengstacken home was made even more attractive for the occasion by a pretty decoration scheme in which blue hydrangeas and greens predominated. Fourteen ta-
