EVENING STORIES AND TALES FOR THE LITTLE PEOPLE

(All Rights Reserved)

My dear little girls and boys:

Most of you, I know, have at some time built houses out of blocks, and have watched them tumble down. If the blocks were all straight and in their proper places, your block houses would not fall down. Usually we find when building our block houses, that down near the bottom, we have left out a block or put one in crooked so that when the house is nearly done, over it goes and our work is all to be done over again. How unhappy this makes us.

So it is, my dears, with our little lives. You are starting out now to build your characters, and afterwards when you get to be men and women, your building is nearly done. Let us begin to build by forming habits that will make a good strong character. When our building is finished, if we have put all the blocks in straight and in their proper places, even a hard blow will not knock down the building we have built.

There are the blocks of love, obedience, firmness, truthfulness, cleanliness, cheerfulness, kindness, bravery, promptness, patriotism, and many others which we use in building our characters. The habits we form now as we are growing to womanhood and manhood all affect our lives later.

Let us be careful to form good characters. Let us try to build a character so strong that nothing will shake it.

I WILL NEVER TELL A LIE

"Good morning, Mrs. Brown, where is Jack? I have come to play with him," said Charles, Jack's chum. "I am very sorry to tell you," replied Mrs. Brown, "that Jack is in bed."

"But why is he in bed on a pretty day like this," asked Charles, "is he ill?"
"No, he isn't ill, and he isn't in bed because he chooses to be, but because he has been a bad boy. There is no punishment that hurts Jack as much as going to bed on a day like this, when he can hear the other children out playing. You know, Charles," said Mrs. Brown, "that Jack and Ted went swimming yesterday when I had told them they must not go."

"I see Ted out playin'," replied Charles. "I do not think it right to punish Jack and Ted when they both went."

"Well," said Mrs. Brown, "Jack, I am sorry to say, did a much worse thing than go swimming. He told me a lie, and that, to me, is one of the worst things a boy or girl can do. When I asked Ted about it, he told me he had gone but that he was very sorry and would not disobey me again. When I asked Jack, he told me he did not go and did not know that any of the boys had gone. Think of it, if I allow him to begin telling stories now, what will become of him. When people find out he tells stories, they will not believe him even when he tells the truth. No one will like him and no one will trust him. No one likes a liar, and that is what a girl or boy is who tells stories. You come back tomorrow, Charles, and I want to ask you to not repeat what I have said to Jack's other playmates."

I WILL NEVER DO ANY-THING FATHER OR MOTHER HAS FORBIDDEN, BECAUSE THEY CANNOT SEE ME DO IT

"Who is that person to whom you were talking when I called you to dinner, Papa?" said Willie to his father. Was he a man or a boy? He had such an old looking face but his body was so thin and tiny. He made me think of Tom Thumb, and why was his face that ugly color?"

"Now, my son," replied Willie's father, "if you will stop talking a little while, I will answer your first question. That funny looking little man with whom I was talking went to school to me when I was teaching school. He was a bright, healthy lad and had the promise of being a strong man, but he did a very, very bad thing that stunted, or stopped his growth. When he was eleven years old—just think of it, only eleven years old,—he used to slip out into the woods and smoke cigarettes, and even chew filthy tobacco. He knew that this was a bad, nasty habit and that his parents would not allow him to do such things, but he sneaked away and did it. You now see the results. While he is a man in years, he has that shrivelled up body and is ashamed to be seen. I want you to tell all of your boy friends about this, William, for I know you all want to have big, strong bodies when you grow to be men. Another thing I want you to remember, William, is that girls and boys may think they are hiding from every one when they do the things that their parents have told them not to do, but there is One who sees their every act, and from Whom they cannot hide. Do you know who this One is?"

THE LITTLE HOUSEKEEPER

Do the little girl readers ever cook? If not, they all ought to learn to do so as soon as possible. I am going to tell you how to make a good, plain cake which will surprise Papa when he comes home to dinner.

Mix together one cupful of sifted flour, one cup of sugar, and a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Put into a cup two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Drop into the butter, two eggs without beating and fill the cup full of milk. Pour the contents of the cup into the flour. Stir thoroughly. Have the oven quite hot. Bake about twenty minutes.

Any little girl can bake this simple cake by being careful, and it is very good.

BOBBIE'S SUMMER IN THE COUNTRY

Setting Mrs. Hen

The morning after Grandma had told Bobbie how little chickens were hatched, she gave him sixteen eggs. "Now we are going to set Mrs. Hen. I am going to show you how, and let you do it."
Bobbie put the eggs carefully into his hat and followed Grandma out to the hen-house where the black hen was waiting patiently. Grandma lifted her aside while Bobbie put the eggs in the nest. The hen was very careful not to break the eggs, and soon had them all covered nicely. "Now we must remember that just three weeks from today the eggs will hatch," said Grandma.

Bobbie was very proud to think he had set the hen and that he was to have care of her and her little family.

Grandma was so very busy and Bobbie found so many things to do about the farm that he quite forgot the setting hen until one day when he was riding old Rose out to water, he heard "cluck! cluck! cluck!" and "peep! peep! peep!" Not far from him he saw the proud black hen and some of the dearest little chickens. Mrs. Hen was hunting fish worms for her tiny babies and they all seemed to want the same worm. Bobbie wondered why.

She ruffled up her feathers and said "cluck! cluck! cluck!" "Peep! peep! peep!" said the little chickens. The mother hen then sat down and the little chickens went under her. "Oh! I know," thought Bobbie, "her baby chickens were cold and mamma was calling them under her wings to warm them, and how she seems to love them."

A NICE BOOK FOR SMALL CHILDREN

Take six pieces of linen or other strong goods, and cut them as wide as long, making them the size desired. Cut bright pictures out of old magazines, such as pictures of squirrels, birds, bears, flowers and such other things as a child likes. Make paste of flour and water and paste these on the linen or other goods. Leave a small space in middle of goods to fold, and sew a straight line down middle and fold together. This makes a book that the little fellows like and they soon learn to make their own books in this manner, and soon begin to save many of the pretty pictures that otherwise are destroyed.
