

All Eyes on Pacific Coast

One of the many good things accomplished by the Panama Canal, its building and now by the consideration of rules to regulate it, is the advertising of the Pacific Coast. All over the country the people know that the territory along the Pacific Coast will be vastly benefitted by the opening of the Canal. Especially will the gateways of the Pacific Coast, the harbor cities, be helped. Coos Bay will have railroad communication with the rest of the country by the time the Canal is ready for business, and the double effect of the entrance of the railroad here and the opening of the Canal will cause a growth and prosperity on Coos Bay that experienced business men say will be second to none in the history of any city in the country.

First Addition to Marshfield

The main chance for annexing some of this prosperity to yourself is in owning real estate on Coos Bay. Any lot in Marshfield you buy at present market prices will make you money. The lots in First Addition to Marshfield are the best real estate bargains now offered; this is apparent from the large sale of them to Marshfield business men.

These lots are each 50 feet wide, 120 feet long, face on improved streets, cost $300, and can be bought at terms to suit your purse.

Follow the pavement on South Fifth Street (where so many handsome new residences are being built). First Addition commences three blocks south of the High School.

JACK came home earlier than usual that night. He had had a hard day's work in the office and was much in need of rest. Dorothy and Jack, Junior, both met him at the gate, dressed immaculately. He noticed as he entered the kitchen, (Jack always had to go to the back door lest he leave footprints on the hall floor) how spick and span everything was.

"Where is your mother, children?" asked Jack.

"She is upstairs cleaning out the linen closet," replied Dorothy, "and she is just awful tired, 'cause I heard her say so."

"O, Louise," called Jack. "Come on down and let's take the kiddies over to the park for an hour before dinner. It will be a rest for us both, and say, but it's cool over there!"

"I'm awfully sorry, Jack," came Mrs. Jack's answer in a plaintive voice, but I'm dead tired, and I've just got to finish this closet for tomorrow. I have more planned than I can get done, and then there is another thing—I've got a roast in the oven, and I have to watch it."

"O! hang the roast," replied Jack, and soon he was in the park with Dorothy and Jack, Junior. When they returned from the park at six o'clock, Jack found everything in the best of order, a spotless table, but a tired looking little woman. As soon as dinner was finished, Jack said to Mrs. Jack: "Let's go for a stroll, Louise, and talk over old times. I see there are to be some good pictures at one of the theatres. We might drop in there. We can get a girl to come and stay with the kiddies."

"I'm just too tired, and besides the girl might not put them to bed just at eight o'clock, or attend to them properly," replied Mrs. Jack.

Jack was soon at his club having what the other fellows called a "Jolly time," but to him it was just a change—something to while away the time.

Mrs. Jack put the children to bed at eight and then began to sort over some things in an old trunk. She came to a bundle of old letters tied with blue ribbon. They were from Jack, and written during the old days of their courtship. That very evening, Jack had spoken of old times. As she spread the first one, out rolled a ringlet of hair tied with dainty ribbon. As she began reading, the color came back into the thin pale face and her cheeks burned as she read:

"When we shall be so happy
In a cozy, little cot,
Hid in a nest of roses
In some fairy garden spot,
Where the vines are ever fruited,
And the weather's ever fine,
And the birds are ever singing
For that old sweetheart of mine.
She sat as one in a dream, thinking, thinking. "Something is wrong," said she to herself.

When she again folded the letter it was wet with tears, tears of happiness, tears of sadness.

The next morning Mrs. Jack strolled to the gate with Jack, and plucking a rosebud, she pinned it on his coat.

That day, work in the office seemed very easy for Jack and for some reason he could scarcely wait to start home. That evening Mrs. Jack met him at the gate looking rested and happy. He found Dorothy and Jack, Junior, in the back yard dressed in overalls and playing in a pile of sand.

"My! but things taste good tonight, Louise, and you are looking like a queen."

While they were eating, the door-bell rang. "Never mind," said Mrs. Jack. "It's only the girl who is going to stay with the kiddies. I'm going for a stroll with you tonight, and talk over old times."

THE SUNDAY MAIL SERVICE

Postmaster Curtis Receives Further Instructions Concerning the New Order.

Postmaster Curtis is in receipt of the following communication from the First Assistant Postmaster General. According to this letter, box-holders may get such mail as is distributed, also newspapers and hotels are to receive Sunday mail. Postmaster Curtis says that during part of the year the Marshfield mail arrives before midnight and under this construction of the new regulation the mail will be distributed as before and boxholders will get their mail as formerly.

The following is the official letter on the subject:

Sir: From numerous communications received at the department there appears to be some misapprehension among postmasters as regards the provision in the Post Office Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, relating to the delivery of mail on Sunday at first and second class post offices concerning which certain instructions were issued by circular letter dated the 24th instant. This provision as construed by the Postmaster General does not require that the lobbies of such offices be closed on Sunday but simply that the delivery of mail to the general public, through the general delivery, carrier windows, and boxes be discontinued. Mail received in time for distribution into such boxes before midnight on Saturday should be distributed to the boxes and be available to lock-box holders on Sunday, as usual.

The only mail that will be affected under the Postmaster General's construction of the new law is that received at the post office on Sunday which has hitherto been distributed to lock boxes, and of this mail that intended for newspapers and for hotel guests, and also newspapers addressed to newsdealers.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Incase out of ear are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by H.A.'s Catarrh Cure, send for circulars, free.

should be distributed to the boxes as hitherto.

In order to give the provision as liberal a construction as possible the Postmaster General wishes postmasters on application to have their employees sort out in emergency cases on Sunday letters of special importance when the office of origin is known. This will supplement the present privilege of having such mail delivered on Sunday by purchasing a special delivery stamp therefor.

The purpose of the law is to reduce as far as practicable the amount of Sunday labor in post offices. However, the movement of transit mail and the distribution of mail collected in cities for dispatch to other destinations must be continued, and in order that the early delivery on Monday may not be delayed mail received for delivery by carrier on Monday morning, as far as practicable, should be worked after midnight on Sunday. Clerks when making up direct packages that will reach first and second class offices on Sunday should place letters addressed to newspapers and hotels on top of the package immediately under the special delivery matter, should there be any, and daily papers published on Sunday should be kept separate and distinct from other matter and dispatched in sacks so labeled as to show their contents.

It is believed that if the suggestions herein are carefully observed with reference to putting up mail in the office of origin a satisfactory distribution can be made in post offices on Sunday with even less work than is now required and without inconvenience to the public.

Respectfully,
E. T. BUSHNELL,
Acting First Assistant Postmaster General.
