COINCIDENCE OF DEATH.

WITH the visitation of death upon humans, there are frequently peculiar features which impress with significance those left behind in the mortal world. Particularly is this true with the passing away of the elderly ones. Two of Coos county's pioneer women died the same night. They were women of that class which helped to make Oregon. They were dear friends to each other and that peaceful death should come to them during the same night and make the shock a doubled one to their friends was a matter of more than passing comment. There was an additional coincidence. Mrs. Siglin, who was a dear friend of Mrs. Hirst, had followed the old time and honored habit of maintaining a record of events which touched upon the members of her family. The old newspapers and official records show that Gen. Siglin, her husband, died some years ago on October 18. Mrs. Siglin in recording the demise of her husband in her private family record put down as the date Sept. 18, by mistake, instead of Oct. 18. Mrs. Siglin passed away on Sept. 18 of this year, the exact day of the year, her records mistaken one month, showed on which her husband had died. In ordinary lives such matters would be overlooked, but the coincidences in connection with the deaths of these venerable persons, who had served their place in the world and pioneered an empire, might well cause the wonder as to whether or not a full spent life in its allotted place carries with it more than is enjoyed by the ordinary, commonplace mortal.

NORTH BEND, HELLO'S TO YOU!

REGARDLESS of varying views on the bridge question all hats must be taken off to the business men manufacturers and citizens of North Bend generally for their great parade this morning. It was really a splendid showing and proves what may be accomplished by co-operation and a united spirit directed toward a definite end. It was a showing of which North Bend may well be proud and was without doubt one of the largest parades ever held on Coos Bay.

The plan and execution of the affair were alike admirable. The Simpson Lumber mills, the various factories and the business men generally were in line. Viewed merely in the light of civic pride that parade set a high standard for the future.

The Times congratulates Mayor Simpson and his bunch of "live ones" on their accomplishment.
