THIS WEEK'S MOTTO

I will not cheat in my school work.

There are a few boys and girls who form the bad habit of cheating in school, by copying their work from some other pupil's paper. This is not only cheating, but it is lying—getting something for nothing. Copying your work may seem the easiest at the time, but when examination comes you will wish that you had learned the things that you are asked. When you cheat in your school work it is yourself that you are hurting and no one else. The same child who will do all sorts of things when the teacher is not looking, is usually the one who will do the cheating. Let us start in the first of this term, fully determined to be honest in all of our school work. I know that there is no child who wants to be called a cheat or a sneak, and that is what you are if you copy your lessons. If you try hard to obey your teacher, and are honest in your work, you will find that your lessons are much easier and that you are happier.

THE DUCK'S FLIGHT

One day there were twelve fat ducks swimming in a pond that was close to Farmer Grey's barnyard. The old farmer came out with a bucket of grain to feed them. As they waddled into the barnyard, one of the oldest and wisest of them said: "I believe that the farmer is going to market today, so let us all be very careful lest he grabs us while we are eating, to take to some of those village people to feast on."

"There is nothing to fear," said one of the youngest ones. "The village people all like turkeys and chickens better than ducks."

While Young Duck and his brother were near the farmer eating, he caught them. "You are just the fellows I want," said he; "the butcher will be pleased with you."

The ducks fought hard to get away, but they were soon in the back of the springwagon on their way to town. "It seems very sad to have to die so young," said one.

"Yes it does," replied the other, "but if we had listened to old Mrs. Duck's warning, this terrible thing would not have happened."

"Let us try to make our escape," said one.

"There is no use," replied the other; "I have nearly broken my neck trying to pry this latch loose. I tell you, we are doomed."

While the farmer was talking to the butcher in front of his butcher shop, the butcher's little girl came running up. "Oh, you dear old daddy," said she, "you have bought the ducks that I have wanted so long for pets."

"Well, well," said one, "it is pets that the butcher wanted us for and not to roast. If we had only known this we could have enjoyed the ride."

"That is true," said the other one, "and my neck would not be so sore, either."

KATIE'S NEW FRIENDS.

"I do hope that the people who are moving in next door will have some children," said Katie to her mother. "Perhaps they will, but you must not be in too much of a hurry about getting acquainted," replied her mother.

That afternoon Katie was in her playhouse, in the back yard, when she heard a harsh voice say: "Katie is a bad girl." This frightened her so much that she dropped her doll, breaking its head. She looked all around her, but no one was in sight.

"Oh mother, do come out here right away," called Katie. "I'm too scared to move." She told what had happened, but her mother thought that her little girl must be mistaken. In a short time, the voice repeated the same words, even louder than before. "That sounds like a parrot," said mamma.

Katie's mother parted the vines that separated their yard from the new neighbor's yard, and sure enough, there was a Polly parrot in a cage. "You must excuse me for seeming curious," said Katie's mother, "your parrot has just been giving my daughter quite a fright by calling her a bad girl. Katie is my little girl's name."

"Katie is my little girl's name also," replied the new neighbor, who was feeding her parrot, "and the boys taught Polly to call her a bad girl, just to tease her sister."

Now Katie has a little girl of her own name to share her playhouse, and the other Katie has a new friend to help her care for Polly.

LIBRARY NOTES.
Among the magazines recently added to the subscription list of the Library is the National Geographic Magazine. It is profusely illustrated. Its articles are of a kind that attract any one interested in travel and science. An invaluable aid to the teacher of geography or the natural sciences, it also fascinates children. A list of the articles published in the August number will give an idea of its scope.

"Notes about ants and their resemblance to man," brings to mind the verse in Proverbs: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise."

"The grandest and most mighty terrestrial phenomenon; the gulf stream," has delightful bits of information that would enrich any geography lesson. For instance, is it known Franklin was the first to draw a chart of that great ocean river?

"Elephant hunting in equatorial Africa with rifle and camera," has a perennial charm for lovers of both. The photographs are as alluring as circus posters and much better done.

"Zanzibar." What does that name mean to most of us? Is it a place, an animal or a new invention? Read and discover for yourself.

"Volcanoes of Alaska," brings us near home. The photograph of the piano almost covered with ashes and the motto "God bless our home," looking down on the ruined room impresses the awful disaster at Kodiak more sharply upon our minds than any description.

Miss Alice Peck has presented the Library with a copy of Dante's "Inferno," illustrated by Dore.

ROOSEVELT IN KANSAS.
(By Associated Press to the Coos Bay Times.)

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 21.—Roosevelt came into Kansas to remain here for two days. He is campaigning today and resting tomorrow. "The tall said it was irregular for the dog to wave it," said Roosevelt today of the statement that the Progressives had bolted from the republican party. In Nebraska for instance at the primaries last spring Mr. Taft polled about one-sixth of the republican votes. Yet our opponents called themselves regular and the yelled the 63 to 84 per cent of the voters bolters."
