BANDON OIL WELL.

Drillers Down About 4,000 Feet on it Now.

The Bandon oil propositions seem to be reviving again through the efforts made by the West Shore Oil Company, a Bandon corporation, composed entirely of local men whose operations are located on the Coos-Curry county line, about 14 miles from Bandon. The company have set up a complete drilling outfit, and full double string of bits and drills and have 4,000 feet of casing. The well was started at 14 inches diameter, and has been drilled at that size for a greater depth than any other well in Southwestern Oregon.

The operation has been rather slow owing largely to the extreme hardness of the fine rock through which the operations have been going on, the character of which rock however, indicates a finer quality of oil, according to experts. W. H. Button, the driller, has passed through and cased off, at different levels, a flow of sulphur and brackish water, and also a flow of salt water. Pure lime rock has been encountered in the well.

The jailor turned over Moore's watch and money and Stedeman left. He had 175 days more to serve.

SCHOONER OREGON LEAKING.

Coquille Vessel Puts Into Humboldt Bay With Exhausted Crew.

EUREKA, Cal., Nov. 9.—In a sinking condition and laden with a cargo of 500,000 feet of lumber, the steam schooner Oregon was towed into Humboldt Bay a few days ago by the tug Relief.

The Oregon was ten days out from the Coquille river, bound for San Francisco. It is believed by Captain Guhl that his vessel struck the bar as they were leaving port, thus springing her seams.

When it was discovered that the ship was leaking a gasoline pump was started. The supply of gasoline was soon exhausted, however, and sailors then manned the pumps. All hands were exhausted, however, when the schooner arrived off Humboldt Bay and it was decided to put in here for another supply of gasoline.

The Oregon is now lying in the stream with her pumps working. Word has been sent to the Randolph Lumber Company of Randolph, Oregon, owners of the vessel and pending instructions the schooner will remain here.
