BE CHARITABLE.

MOST of the friction which makes the machinery of living more rough and discordant is caused by things too petty to be noticed if we were in our normal condition.

AMBITION

—BY— BOB STANLEY

Wouldn't mind a-hangin' round this here outfit, where I've found all the fellers on the square, playin' hard, but dealin' fair, but I'm gettin' kind o' tired holdin' steers and bein' hired, and I want to try my hand way off in some other land where I won't have any boss, and won't even see a boss. Want to play my hand alone where I can't hear foreman's tone callin' me out of the lay long before the break o' day, tellin' me I got to go roundin' up down there below.

Givee I'll go to sea, and sail where there won't be any trail, and I can't see hide nor hair of no cayuse pitchin' there, or else go and live in town in a bungalow that's brown-painted white aroun' the doors, and real carpets on the floors, and some pictur's on the walls different from the kind that calls feller's mind to gamblin' place, or to gal with painted face.

Won't my joy be most complete with some slippers on my feet, puffin' on the nicotine, drinkin' in that purty scene?

That's just what I'll do some day—go and live 'bout that-a-way, soon as I can gather in 'nough of Uncle Sammy's tin.
