

NEW VESSEL FOR COQUILLE

UNCLE SAM TO BE BROUGHT FROM COLUMBIA RIVER FOR RUN—OTHER SHIPPING NEWS.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 6.—Uncle Sam is the name of a brand new steamer, built at the head of East River, six miles above Corvallis, which arrived at the Salmon street wharf on her maiden run. In appearance there is just as much difference between her and the ordinary river steamer as there is in the general run of individuals and the caricatures of Uncle Sam. Her cabin is built flush with the deck. Captain R. J. Galbraith, builder and owner of the vessel, says he may take her to the Coquille River and place her in commission on that stream. She has capacity for handling about 150 tons of general freight and accommodations for seventy-five passengers. She is said to be the largest steamer ever built so near the headwaters of the Willamette River.

With Captain Archie Riggs on the bridge, the Uncle Sam completed the run from Corvallis to Portland in twelve hours, which is held to be the record for quick time. Her owner says she easily can maintain a speed of ten miles an hour. Coming down the river she was kept under headway only during daylight. Riggs says this was his first attempt to pilot a steamer on the Upper Willamette in the last seven years. He found that the channel, at a number of stretches, had shifted considerably in that interval.

"The Uncle Sam will be an exceptionally cheap steamer to operate," explained Captain Riggs. "In the twelve hours from Corvallis she consumed but one cord of wood."

Plan Five Vessels.
A steamship line made in Oregon, operated from Portland and owned here, is the plan of Captain Richard Chilcott. He wants to raise $1,250,000 for the commencement, with which to construct three 4,000-ton vessels, and open service with these between Portland and New York. As the business develops, or he is sure it will, he would bond the company then to build two more giving to the line five good carriers for all classes of tonnage.

Steamer Casco Chartered.
To assist its regular fleet engaged in the coastwise trade, the Charles R. McCormick Company chartered the steamer Casco to load lumber at St. Helens for San Francisco. It is announced that the steamer Carlos also will take a deckload of lumber for the same concern at St. Helens for the Bay City. In April the McCormick steamers handled the great bulk of the lumber which left the Willamette River for California ports.

Half-Mile Steamships.
LONDON, May 6.—An Atlantic steamship half a mile long, registering 200,000 tons, having a beam of 240 feet and carrying 60,000 passengers, is the astounding leviathan predicted by S. C. Giffallan. That is if the growth in size of the ships for the next 40 years continues at the same rate as of the last 40.

By means of a plotted curve Mr. Giffallan indicates the growing size of modern liners, which begins with the Great Western in 1840 and rises with steadily increasing ascent to the Olympic and Imperator of today. If this curve is projected in the most conservative path to the year 1935 you have a ship 1600 feet long and in two decades more one of 2150, or five times the length of the Olympic.

STATUES WITH A STORY

"LEARN ONE THING EVERY DAY"

No. 2. "THE DYING GAUL." Copyright, 1913, by The Associated Newspaper School, Inc.

BUTCHERED to make a Roman holiday," said the poet Byron of the statue of "The Dying Gaul." Everyone believed at that time that this statue was supposed to represent a gladiator dying from a wound received in a contest. But it does not.

About 240 B. C. the Gauls were overrunning all Asia Minor. King Attalus of Pergamon was a great fighter, however, and he conquered them. To commemorate this successful campaign, he brought over some sculptors from Greece, who set up statues representing his victory.

Among these were many single figures, of which "The Dying Gaul" is one. "This is undoubtedly a Gaul," says Lubke, "who, seeing the approach in overwhelming force, has fallen on his own sword to escape a shameful slavery. Overcome by the faintness of approaching death, he has fallen upon his shield; his right arm with difficulty prevents his sinking to the ground; his life ebbs rapidly away with the blood streaming from the deep wound beneath his breast; his broad head drops heavily forward; the mists of death already cloud his eyes; his brows are knit with pain; his lips parted in a last sigh. There is perhaps no other statue in which the bitter necessity of death is expressed with such terrible truth—all the more terrible because his sturdy body is so full of strength—because the impression conveyed is so little softened by anything ideal, or by any harmonious beauty in the figure; for the character of the barbarian, as contrasted with the refined and cultured Greek, is worked out most carefully in the treatment of the body, in the rough and even callous texture of the skin, the rugged outlines of the frame, the bristling hair, and the distinct race-type indicated by the head."

The Gauls, or as they called themselves, Celts, were a fierce, fighting race. They lived in that part of Europe which is France now. They came from farther east, and were the earliest invaders of the country. They became very powerful, and spread out in various directions over Europe. In the third century B. C. a great host of Celts swarmed over most of Asia Minor until defeated by Attalus of Pergamon. "The Dying Gaul" was of this high-spirited and courageous race.

A huge army of Franks and Vandals burst over Gaul in 407 A. D. They captured the entire country, and settled down into the three kingdoms of the Visigoths, the Franks, and the Burgundians.

Every day a different human interest story will appear in The Times. You can get a beautiful intaglio reproduction of this picture, with five others, equally attractive, 7 by 9 1/2 inches in size, with this week's "Mentor." In "The Mentor" a well known authority covers the subject of the pictures and stories of the week. Readers of The Times and "The Mentor" will know Art, Literature, History, Science, and Travel, and own exquisite pictures. On sale at The Times office. Price ten cents. The Safe Light
If electric light has nothing else in its favor than its safety and its healthfulness it would still be the best illuminant. Anxiety for the safety of children has no place in electric lighted homes—no matches are needed.

The Pure Air Light
Pure air—the greatest preventive of disease—is assured, owing to the sealed glass globe within which the light burns. It can neither consume the oxygen in the air nor throw off impurities.

Prepare for an enjoyable Summer by wiring your home this Spring. Electric light is only one of the many conveniences and pleasures of the electric wired home. Telephone 178 and let us submit figures.
