

NEWS OF NEARBY TOWNS

NEWS OF LANGLOIS.

Upper Curry County Events as Told By The Leader.
John Bane and wife passed through Langlois on their way home the first part of the week after a few days' stay in Coos County. Mr. Bane informed the Leader that he has a first-class planer installed in his mill. W. C. Boyd and John White in the near future will go into the white-washing and painting business. They intend to travel in a rig up and down Curry and Coos Counties, spraying trees, white-washing barns and chicken houses and also will put on fire-proof paint.

Five of Bandon's business men passed through Langlois yesterday on their way to the Sixes for the purpose of locating mining claims. This season is the banner year for mines and just at present Curry County is attracting many outside people for the purpose of mining.

CULLINGS OF COQUILLE.
Coos County Seat News as Told by The Herald.

Theodore Hillyer, a printer and linotype operator, formerly of Marshfield, was in town a few hours Saturday. He and his wife and two children are visiting at the home of Mrs. Hillyer's father, Ben Shull, at Myrtle Point, and may conclude to make their home again in Coos.

Geo. W. Wilson, of Myrtle Point, was in town yesterday. He contemplates moving with his family to the Willamette Valley shortly.
Richard Thrush, who has a farm on Seven Mile, near Randolph, was in the city Saturday. He expected to sail on the Breakwater from Marshfield with Mrs. Thrush and their sons, Manuel R., Luther, Lawrence, Nathaniel and George, on their way to visit their daughter, Mrs. G. C. Franklin, at Pleasant Valley, Oregon, expecting to make an extended stay.

Tenn Robinson, of Fishtrap, was a caller Saturday. Mr. Robinson settled on Fishtrap with his parents and family 40 years ago and has been a resident of this valley continuously ever since. He was 18 years old when he came here and is a young man yet, which shows that California hasn't got the only glorious climate on earth. He has watched Fishtrap come out of the wild state into a prosperous and pleasant little community, and has seen this town grow from a very small beginning. Incidentally, he does not believe that Coquille is the worst place in the world—by a long shot.

FINE BRIDGE RANCH.

Peter Axe, of Bridge, was in town on one of his rare visits. Mr. Axe is proprietor of the cannery at Bridge and handles the tomato, peach and pear crop of that vicinity. He reports that the prospects are good in those crops for this season. He expects to handle 100 boxes of tomatoes every other day, about 1000 boxes of peaches and several hundred of pears. Nosler & Norton, of this city, will handle his tomatoes this season, and in this crop there is never a failure in his territory, as they are raised by irrigation. Mr. Axe is anxious to see the road put in first-class shape, so that he will dare to put his output up in glass instead of tin without risk of breakage in hauling to Myrtle Point.

ROSEBURG POSTMASTER.

A Roseburg paper says: "L. F. Reizenstein, for the past 12 years city editor of the Roseburg Review, last night received his commission as postmaster at Roseburg, direct from the postoffice department at Washington, D. C. Mr. Reizenstein stated this morning that he would assume charge of the local postoffice on June 1. Since engaging in the newspaper business in Roseburg, Mr. Reizenstein has attended regular meetings of the Roseburg city council for 12 years, and has missed but few sessions. Last evening he probably recorded the doings of the council for the last time in the capacity of a journalist."

The History of Furniture

By Going & Harvey Company

Although we pass our lives in houses of our own or those of others, very few, indeed, have any idea of the origin of the homely articles with which we are surrounded. But, from attic to kitchen, in nearly all of them, there is to be traced quite a romantic beginning. Take the pictures hanging on the wall, for instance. They date back to about 500 years, when monks painted their living rooms round with Scriptural subjects. One day someone suggested nailing a piece of wood in between the paintings to separate the subjects. Then came gilding, and the modern picture frame followed as matter of course.

The drawing-room is very fertile in romance. As most people know, its real and true title is the "with-drawing-room," i. e., the room to which you withdrew after dinner. The origin of antimacassars is also common history. One hundred and fifty years ago it was the fashion to dress the head liberally with macassar oil. Housewives, objecting to the damage caused to their chairs by this grease, placed strips of lace over the backs and the word and article antimacassar came into being.

The chairs themselves are very interesting. They date back to the time when knights and ladies, wishing to keep their feet off the draughty floors, brought in the use of the stretcher. Originally the stretcher was only raised a few inches above the rush-strewn ground, but gradually the form was altered, and by the time that carpets were common the stretcher had evolved into a high-legged and high-backed chair. The cosy armchair came last of all. At first only a cushion was placed over the wooden seat. Then they carved the legs of the seat possessing the cushion, and finally they padded back and arms. Chairs were always very important articles of furniture. Today "taking the chair" denotes taking the head of affairs, and is reminiscent of the time when only the most important personage present sat on a four-legged seat, the lesser fry having to put up with three-legged stools.

Window curtains, or, rather, the European idea, came from China in the Middle Ages, when some adventurous traveller returning from that country mentioned the Chinese habit of fastening a piece of cloth across the windows.

Table drawers owe their being to the gamblers of former days. A place was wanted to keep the cards when not in use, and an aperture beneath the table top was utilized.

Kitchen is derived from an Anglo-Saxon word, being to cook. Scullery has nothing to do with scullion, but comes from a word mean a bowl; while "hall"—meaning a covered-in place—has just the same root as—the infernal regions.

This is the first word in Furniture.
