THE MOTHERS PENSION LAW

SALEM, Or., June 5.—The use of the word "were" instead of the words "shall be" in the section of the widows pension bill designating to whom it shall be applicable, has caused a number to assert that the measure applies only to widows who are residents of the state when the bill becomes effective, or who were residents prior thereto, and that it does not apply to the future.
Assistant Attorney-General Van Kinkle, however, after a perusal of the bill, gave it as his opinion that the measure applies only to widows who are residents of the state when it becomes effective, and to such who come within its purview afterwards, and that it is not retroactive. The section in question reads:
"This act shall apply only to women who are residents of this state at the time this act is passed, or who were residents of the state at the time of the occurrence of the events which entitle them to the benefits of this act provided by section 1."
If technically construed the measure would seem only to apply to widows who are residents when it becomes effective, or who were residents prior thereto, and that it should not be applicable to widows who might become residents of the state after its passage. The Assistant Attorney General, however, does not believe that such a construction would carry out the intent of the measure. He is of the opinion that the word "were" was used inadvertently, and that it was intended to convey the same meaning as the words "shall be," and that if a court were called upon to construe the bill, it would so interpret it. Under such an interpretation the measure would not be retroactive, but would apply only to widows who are residents of the state at the time it becomes effective, or who may become residents of the state afterwards, and otherwise come within its purview, and that, he believes, was the intent of the lawmakers who passed it.
Under the terms of the bill every woman who has one or more children under the age of 16 years and whose husband is either dead or is an inmate of some Oregon institution, or by reason of physical or mental disease is wholly unable to work, and whose support and the support of whose children is dependent wholly or in part upon her labor, shall be entitled to assistance for herself and her children from the county in which she resides to the extent of $10 a month for one child, and if she has more than one, $7.50 per month for each additional child. Should she have any income other than that derived from her labor, then she shall be entitled to such assistance as, added to the income, shall be equal to the sum she would have received did she not possess an income. The act does not apply to any child which has property enough of its own to support it nor to a child which does not reside with its mother. The Juvenile Court is charged with the administration of the act, and should it determine that the mother is improvident, careless or negligent in the expenditure of the money received, it may direct that the money be paid to some other person for the benefit of the mother and her children.

BONA FIDE HOTEL PARTLY DEFINED.
Need Not Have 50 Rooms for Liquor Purposes; Must Have Good Faith.
SALEM, Ore., June 6.—What is a bona fide hotel with accommodations for 50 guests, within the provisions of the law enacted by the last legislature prohibiting the sale of liquor outside of incorporated towns and cities except in such a bona fide hotel and at certain clubs?
This is the question put to Attorney General Crawford by District Attorney E. B. Tongue, of Hillsboro.
"The provision does not mean necessarily 50 rooms, nor does it mean that 25 rooms would be sufficient," says the opinion. "It is well known that in country hotels frequently one room contains two beds, and that acquaintances are frequently put into the same room, and if a few of the rooms should be in that way, so that there would be bona fide accommodations for 50 guests, I think it would come within the meaning of the law, although there are not 50 separate rooms."
"On the other hand a person would not be allowed to crowd a whole lot of beds into small rooms for the purpose of claiming he had accommodations for 50 guests, when in fact it would be a subterfuge for the purpose of obtaining a license to sell liquor. I think the law would have been better if it had said 50 rooms, but it does not, and therefore public officials must use their judgment as to whether it is a bona fide hotel and has good accommodations for at least 50 guests."

TO WED IN OLD JAPAN.
Massachusetts Girl Travels Far Alone To Marry Old Schoolmate.
SAN FRANCISCO, June 5.—Following a journey from Medford, Mass., which will not be completed until she arrives at Yokohama, Japan, Miss Louisa J. Pike, a young woman of 22, sailed on the Shinyo Maru to meet Kersey Fell Coe, an old time sweetheart, now engaged with the Standard Oil Company, to whom she will be married June 24 at the Presbyterian mission in Yokohama.
Miss Pike and Mr. Coe are old schoolmates and became engaged some time ago. Recently he was transferred to Japan, with little prospect of securing a vacation of sufficient length to enable him to visit America for a wedding. He wrote and told his sweetheart of the difficulty and she promptly solved the problem by cabling him that she would start for Japan at once.

Any sweet girl graduate will tell you without a moment's hesitation that the significant thing about graduation—is clothes.

WATER SUPPLY FEDERAL FOREST RESERVES
U. S. Government Furnishes Many Cities From National Forest Reserves
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5.—Secretary Houston has just signed an agreement between the department of Agriculture and the town of Safford, Arizona, by which the Forest Service and the town will co-operate to conserve the Safford water supply, which is principally from the Coos Bay National Forest.
This is the latest one of a series of such agreements. According to figures of the Forest Service there are nearly 1200 cities and towns in the West which derive their water supply from lands within National Forests. Where the cities desire it the Government will co-operate to conserve the water supply by the purchase of water rights, the construction of a permanent water supply.
Stock raisers, for example, ordinarily would be content with a water supply which would be inadvisable on a long term basis. The Forest Service recognizes that water is as valuable a commodity for wooded lands as it is for agriculture, and it proposes to supply as are water supply. A watershed area may be an opportunity to furnish the greatest benefit to the largest number through supplying an adequate source of water for domestic purposes.
Contracts like that just made with Safford are now in force with the state, Colorado Springs, Durango, Manitou in Colorado; Salt Lake, Utah; and Baker and The Dalles, Oregon. The famous Bull Run watershed, which supplies Portland, Oregon, is on the Oregon National Forest.
The co-operative agreement in each case provides that the land will not be used without approval of the town, except for the protection and care of the forests. The agreement agrees to extend and improve the forests by seeding, planting, forest management, so far as funds for that purpose are available. The city, for its part, will pay the salaries of the national guards necessary to carry out the agreement, and contracts bear the greater part of the cost of any improvement work which considers immediately desirable.

BOISE BARRACKS EMPTY
Old Fort Deserted Because of Need for Troops.
BOISE, Idaho, June 4.—Barracks, an army post for a number of years, is today commanded by caretaker. The last command left the place and the site locality is now deserted.
Fort Boise has been abandoned because of the new policy of Government to concentrate troops in larger centers and in larger commands. For many years commanding officers have not their regiments in the vicinity of the number of troops under their command. The number of troops under a major in active service.
Lieutenants Bell and Hester, who have been here since the troops left, ventured the opinion fore going away that there would be a time when the post would be garrisoned, but those who are watching the trend of events entertain much hope, although Senator Borah has made an effort in Washington to have at least two companies kept here.

American Birds of Beauty
"LEARN ONE THING EVERY DAY"

No. 5. WOOD DUCK.
Copyright, 1913, by The Associated Newspaper School, Inc

DUCKS are associated in our minds with broad reaches of meadow or the open sea. They love the wide spaces of the earth, sweeping across the sky in long lines or converging into V-shaped flocks. This rising and falling sinuous line seems as much a part of the early morning on the marshes as the reflected light in the little reed-encircled ponds. The wood duck differs radically, not only in plumage, but in habit, from the rest of the ducks. Instead of seeking for him among his brothers in the sedge, we find the resplendent fellow among the woodland streams and lakes.
Not many miles from New York City there is a little sheet of water tucked snugly away among the hills. Here, for years, when the golden club reared its yellow crown above the water, a pair of these exquisite birds could be found resting and feeding after the long journey from the south. They nested in an old sycamore overhanging the water and nearly every year succeeded in rearing a full brood. An interesting sight it was when the old lady escorted the youngsters to the water. Not in a carefully padded baby carriage with soft quilts and downy pillows. Each tiny yellow ball of fuzz was taken gently by the back of the neck and dropped exactly eleven feet into the water with a splash. The fall did not seem to hurt the little chaps a particle. Indeed, they seemed to enjoy it and a more practical illustration of "ducks taking to water" one would have to go a long way to see. When all were down, they were rounded up, and their education began. It was wonderful to see how quickly they responded and how soon they started in to forage for food on their own account.
And then there came a spring when they did not return and one of the charms of the lake disappeared. The had fallen before the gun of the hunter!
