LAWYERS DISAGREE OVER INTERPRETATION OF JUSTICE HUGHES' DECISION YESTERDAY.

RAILWAYS CLAIM TO HAVE WON BY IT

Claim Congress Can Divest State Railroad Commissions of Rate Powers Now.

(By Associated Press to Coos Bay Times.) WASHINGTON, June 10.—Lawyers who gathered today at the U. S. supreme court to listen to the application of principles laid down by Justice Hughes in the Minnesota rate case to the rates from Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Oregon and West Virginia, were of the opinion that the rate making both in states and before the federal government has been reduced to a much more accurate basis than ever before. All sorts of opinions prevailed as to where the victory rested in the Minnesota decision. The prospect of Congress taking charge of the state rates affecting the interstate commerce indirectly lent encouragement to the railroads that they would escape from regulation by forty-eight state commissions. The attempt of railroads to establish the cost of replacing their property now as equivalent to a "fair value" on which they were entitled to earn rates was regarded as doomed. The federal court in Minnesota adopted that basis.

Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion in the Minnesota rate case, was not present at the opening of the U. S. supreme court today. It was thought doubtful if the decisions in the other rates would be forthcoming. The regulation of railroad rates was rendered more complex by the findings of the court on the opinion of officials of the interstate commerce commission. The holding of the supreme court is that states not only have authority to fix interstate rates but that even though these rates affect interstate rates, they are valid unless shown to be confiscatory.

The law now provides for three. The board would name disinterested arbitrators to act with the arbitrators chosen by the employes and employers.
