THE EXPLORERS
"LEARN ONE THING EVERY DAY"

No. 1. FERNANDO DE SOTO.
Copyright, 1913, by The Associated Newspaper School, Inc.

IT WAS the end of a sultry summer day in June, 1542. The sun was down in the west, twilight was falling. The turkey buzzards settled to rest, and all was quiet. Suddenly the brooding silence of the dense forest was broken. There came the sound of voices and the clink of armor. Though the underbrush and tangled vines, cutting a way with their swords, burst two men. Before them swept a mighty, rushing river. They halted on the bank and were joined in a few minutes by other soldiers bearing a canvas-covered figure.

Night had now fallen. Only a single torch of burning pine branches illuminated the darkness. The little band of men tied some logs together, placed upon them the body, weighted with a heavy stone, and floated this crude raft out upon the river. In midstream they quietly pushed the body overboard, watched the waters close over it, and then sadly made their way back to shore.

Such was the pathetic ending of Fernando de Soto, discoverer of the Mississippi River. His wife in Spain watched through many weary months for his return; but she watched in vain.

De Soto was born about 1500 at Badajoz, Estremadura, Spain. After leaving school he went in 1519 with his patron, Pederarias, on an expedition to Darien in Panama.

After this he explored the coast of Guatemala and Yucatan, and in 1532 led 300 volunteers to aid Pizarro in Peru. He helped to conquer the land of the Incas, and was so successful that when he returned to Spain he possessed a fortune of 180,000 ducats. He married the daughter of his old patron Pederarias, and settled down to a happy home existence.

But reports came to him of the fabulous wealth of Florida, and the wanderlust seized him again. Selling much of his property, leaving wife and friends at home, he set off in 1538 with several hundred foot soldiers and horses. From Havana he went, in 1539, to Tampa Bay on the west coast of Florida. Thence he led his men for four long years in a weary and unsuccessful search for gold, traversing much of the southeastern part of the continent, through dense forests, through terrible swamps, and across swollen rivers. He was a stern, cruel master, and fire and slaughter followed in the wake of his army. He reached the Mississippi in 1541, and spent the next winter in what is now Arkansas and Louisiana. Returning along the Mississippi the next summer, De Soto was stricken with fever and died.

His remaining followers descended the river on rafts, coasted the Gulf of Mexico, and at last arrived, a tattered and weary band, among their countrymen once more.

No. 2. FRANCISCO VASQUEZ DE CORONADO.

AS FAR as the eye could see stretched the endless desert. Nothing but sand and mesquit bushes, with the stinging cactus here and there, met the gaze of the fatigued soldiers dragging their weary way across the burning sands. Far away to the north and also to the west loomed mountain ranges; but they seemed too distant to be reached in time. Horses and men were nearly famished. Time and again they spied water with green trees about it, only to find that it was one of the grim jokes of this cruel land, and all had vanished on near approach. The sun poured down relentlessly; so that the metal of the men's armor burned like red-hot iron. The only living things to be seen were two eagles sailing high in the sky. But relief was near, for in an hour the way led down a concealed arroyo. There at the bottom was water, brackish and not, but still water, and men and beasts were saved.

This was the expedition led by Francisco de Coronado in search of the fabled Seven Cities of Cibola. Rumors of these stately cities, paved with gold and rich in gems, had come to Coronado in Mexico, and taking with him a company of horsemen, footmen and friendly Indians, he set out in February, 1540, on one of the most remarkable expeditions in the history of the exploration of America. Over burning deserts, up barren and forbidding mountains of rock, through quicksands, over snow-capped passes of the Rockies, through deep and gloomy canyons, went the Spaniards.

The Seven Cities they discovered and captured, but they were only the pueblo dwellings of the Zuni Indians, mud-built cities that may be seen today in New Mexico. And there was no gold but the gold of the setting sun.

Parts of the expedition discovered the Mohl settlements of Arizona, and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and the Rio Grande was explored for a considerable distance. Winter was spent on this river, and it was here that the friendly Indians revolted unsuccessfully. They saw vast herds of buffalo, and lured still farther by tales of an eldorado away to the northwest, Coronado and a few horsemen penetrated the interior as far as central Kansas, finding scattered Indian settlements, but the fabled wealth was never discovered.

The missionaries that accompanied the party remained with the Indians in the interior, and some of their rude churches erected through their efforts were among the first built in America. The return was made in 1542.

Coronado was born in Spain about 1500, and accompanied Antonio de Mendoza, first viceroy of Mexico, to that country in 1535. Here he married a wealthy woman and became governor of the province of New Galicia. After his two years of wandering over this strange southwestern land Coronado drops out of sight. He is supposed to have died in 1545.

Now comes the extension of the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station with a book by Ava B. Mann Ruth McNary Smith, entitled "Camp Cookery." The book doesn't tell that the reason for silence, on the subject of camp cooking, is inexperience of the cook, but it suggests that "No phase of life presents more interesting opportunities than is offered in the preparation of food in camps." An experienced camper or former camper will recognize as very true, the statement that "the preparation of food and its relation to efficiency and comfort of the body, the importance of the knowledge of food values and the preparation of the food becomes apparent. It is advised that before starting an expedition is started the preparation of food that will be needed in various varieties, be systematically determined.

The "Camp Cookery" book, for instance, how much food is necessary for a man who goes on a month if he carries it on his back, how much will be necessary to carry it. There are also tables of the government tables much to plan for each individual camping party over various camps. Directions are given as to camp equipment. Most important, all the book closes with a list of recipes for camp dishes that prevent a lot of the "out door" digestion.

STORY FOR THE DAY
A story is told of a couple of California tourists in Spain who not only speak the language, but frequently had some difficulty in getting known their wants.

One day they came to a restaurant and tried to obtain some roast beef, for choice; but they could not understand them.

"What are we to do?" asked them despairingly.

"I know," said the other, with hope appearing. "I'll draw a picture of a cow. Then they'll understand." He drew a rough sketch of the waiter, who instantly understood, and put a "2" beneath it and handed the waiter, who instantly understood, off to execute their order.

A few minutes later he returned with two tickets for a fight.

THREE APPEAR AT ROSEBURG

Gardiner Men Surprise Attorney Brown by Appearing Before Grand Jury

ROSEBURG, Or., July 18. News says: "Much to the surprise of District Attorney Brown, three men, Franklin, Riley Andrews and LaRoache, all of Coos county, have arrived in town in answer to a summons. Andrews is accused of assault with a dangerous weapon, the person of "Shorty" Brown, which recently occurred at Coos Bay in this case, Brown was through the arm, while his name Andrews, was arrested and is to appear before the grand jury.

"LaRoache, who is recognized as one of the smoothest 'bootleggers' in this section of the state, is charged with violating the local option and may be indicted during the next term of court. At least, he is now being investigated.

"Pearl Mitchell, accused of conducting a bawdy house at Coos Bay is expected here, when she is called before the grand jury for interrogation. She, also, was following the recent trouble at dinner.

"Trixie Lowell, another woman of the underworld, who until recently conducted a house of ill-repute, Gardiner has left the country as a result will escape prosecution the present.

"Edward Franklin, also of the underworld, who appears as the witness against the Russian-Americans now confined in jail on charges of assault, is under indictment charged with bootlegging.

"In all, the town of Gardiner has furnished the grand jury a client work to last for several days.

Coos County Changes
"A woman hailing from Coos county appeared in the grand room Wednesday afternoon, and reports current there, also members of the body to investigate certain business transactions of T. R. Dan while acting as president of the First National Bank of this city. It is claimed that Sheridan has various sums of money through the county, some of which it is alleged he secured through the use of loaning. Much of the money, it is said, was never loaned, but was returned to its owners by Mr. Sheridan. To establish whether these transactions of a criminal nature the grand jury has been asked to investigate the name of the Coos county jailer who filed the complaint could not be ascertained."

Cook Book For Campers

Much as you have heard talk about camping, did you ever anyone have anything to say about what they had to eat while they were out? You will hear wonderful descriptions of star lit nights that part sleep and partly music in branches and rushing streams, the fate of the breakfast that will always be a mystery and trout's flavor will not be because, for some reason, there is no trout.
