

RAY H. COREY

RAY H. COREY, manager of the Coos Bay Water Co., graduated from Perdue University, at Lafayette, Ind., with the class of '03. His tendency upon finishing his college studies was to go West, and the year 1912 found him in Portland. From there, he came to Marshfield to assume the management of the Coos Bay Water Company, which position he has filled with the utmost satisfaction. A member of American Society of Civil Engineers, Mr. Corey was a delegate to the convention held at Seattle in 1910. As an engineer he ranks high, and as a booster he is strong for the development of the Harbor of Coos Bay. "The people of Los Angeles have to ride thirty-six miles for deep water facilities and the Southern metropolis has a population in excess of 300,000," he says, "and with the excellent deep water facilities at hand on Coos Bay, there is no good reason to my mind why we should not have a metropolis within the next ten years that will compare favorably with Los Angeles or Portland." Mr. Corey is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Millicoma Club.

R. M. JENNINGS

R. M. JENNINGS recently returned to Coos Bay as manager of the Oregon Power company, a subsidiary organization of the H. M. Byllesby company of Chicago, which owns and operates the gas and electric plants in Marshfield and North Bend and the electric plants in Coquille and Myrtle Point. He has been with the company for years, formerly having charge of its properties at Oklahoma City, and was sent to Coos Bay when the company took over the properties here and started the reconstruction and enlarging of the plants. Later he was transferred to the Eugene district to develop the properties there and again transferred to Coos Bay to take charge of the development of the plants in this section. Although primarily a public utility man, Mr. Jennings is a real booster—who sees and realizes the necessity of forging ahead to accomplish development. Lethargy is an unknown quantity in his lexicon. During his previous residence he was chairman of the executive committee of the Marshfield Chamber of Commerce and a prime mover in public affairs, believing that every man owes it to himself and his fellow citizens to devote more time and energy to the public cause.

ANSON O. ROGERS

ANSON O. ROGERS is one of Coos Bay's best known and most progressive young business men. Born on Coos Bay, he and the country have developed together and now in the early stages of his active business career, he is determined upon expending the energy he possesses in hastening the development of the community whose great natural resources he so fully appreciates. In past years his efforts have been largely devoted to the fine South Coos River ranch which is the pride of Coos county agriculturalists. The Coos building, one of Marshfield's first permanent buildings, is largely due to his efforts and the co-operation of his brother-in-law, J. L. Bowman, of Portland. A heavy holder, with his father, of Coos Bay realty, he is destined to grow financially with the city. His interest in public affairs resulted in his election as a member of the Port of Coos Bay Commission by a large majority and later in his selection as the treasurer of the organization.

FRANK D. COHAN

FRANK D. COHAN, proprietor of the Owl Prescription Pharmacy, "the Central avenue drug store," has created a place for himself and his establishment as one of the factors in the commercial circles of Coos Bay. This has been done by the application of thoroughly modern methods. Twentieth Century progress is typified in the manner in which "The Owl" has taken a place in the forefront of business establishments. Mr. Cohan is representative of the new blood which makes of Marshfield a modern metropolis. He brings to the business the modern principles of commerce which demand as high a standard of morals in business as in personal life. Concentrating on the prescription business, "The Owl" is known as the prescription pharmacy of the city. Mr. Cohan is prominent in business and social circles and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Millicoma Club and the Pan-Hellenic Club.
