THE OLD PIPER
I coaxed me the tale of the Piper
Died,
With a tear in the tall of me eye;
'Tis I do be glad, there be none
such now,
Says I to meself, say I,
For the fagot gleams on a wee bit
lass,
An' a slip of a bl'-eyed lad;
An' what would I do were they looked away,
Says I to meself, bedad.

Then I minded meself of the Piper
ould;
Says 'tis back he has come the
day,
An' what would I do were ones from off me
heart,
Wish his pipe an' his weedlin'
way,
An' what the tafe o' the warreld,
he is;
'Tis say he walks an' sly,
Tass listen, and follow, an' over the hills!
Oh 'tis lonely the day an' I!
—Pauline Frances Camp.

WHEN you see a woman with a skirt so tight she can hardly walk, with a hat trimmed with a long spike feather, with beads three inches high, with a layer of cosmetics on her face, you do not see a victim of fashion, but a victim of her own poor taste and ill-considered vanity, says the Woman's Home Companion. The fashions were never more beautiful—nor more sensible. The narrow skirt—long, not too narrow—that clears the floor is infinitely more sensible than the long, full skirt of the past; the high, tight collar with its attendant headaches has gone; the strange hat, set well down on the head, is a real blessing; the very high heel is very bad style; cosmetics are not worn by women of good taste; fashion even frowns on the hair—a restful change after the heavy be-rattled pompadour; and, best of all, woman's figure is no longer compressed into a series of ugly bulges, and the steel-stiffened corset of days past has become a flexible piece of webbing that supports but does not bind. When these sensible, present-day fashions are exaggerated and distorted, they become ugly and ridiculous, it is true. But no woman is forced to wear them in an exaggerated and distorted form save by her own lack of judgment and her own indifference to comfort and good taste. As for the fabrics—they were never so wonderful. The supple, light woollens, and the splendid glowing silks of winter have given way to the most alluring of cotton and linen stuffs, promise of the summer. The lighter silks, too, have come in a thousand new designs, each one seemingly more lovely than the last. What excuse, therefore, for a woman not to be tastefully dressed—not necessarily expensively, but with due regard to color, line, and individuality? Indeed, there is none. And though she may not admit it, save laughingly to herself, there is no woman who does not realize that to be well dressed is to give herself a delightfully pleasant feeling of well-being and confidence. A becoming costume is a wonderful tonic to the tired spirit, and the sensation of looking one's best is a definite help to be at one's best.
