TWO LINES TO CRESCENT CITY

Rumor Race Between Southern Pacific and Hill Lines Through Southwest Ore.

PORTLAND, April 7.—Now that the residence of Grants Pass have undertaken to finance construction of a railroad from that city south-easterly toward Crescent City, Cal., several rival railroad interests—chiefly the Southern Pacific and the Hill lines—are becoming active in the effort to secure control or possession of the property.

It is evident that the Southern Pacific wants and needs the road. It will form an important link in the Southern Pacific's "all coast" line between Portland and San Francisco. Should the pending litigation intended to dissolve the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific merger prove successful, the Southern Pacific would be left without a direct line of its own into California. The Southern Pacific owns a half interest in the Northwestern Pacific, extending from San Francisco along the coast toward Crescent City. The Santa Fe owns the other half, but the Southern Pacific recently undertook to build a northern extension on its own resources. It is proposed to connect this extension with the line now being built from Grants Pass, thus making the Southern Pacific line complete.

Hill Line Wants Road.
Southern Oregon residents are convinced that J. J. Hill is seeking invasion of that district. The presence of Judge Burke of Seattle, there and negotiations started by him for the purchase of the line between Medford and Jacksonville are considered the initial steps of Hill to construct an extension of the Oregon Trunk Line thru Southern Oregon west to the coast, thence down the coast to San Francisco, the ultimate objective point of Hill's invasion of California.

That Hill plans to enter California there is no doubt and the question is between two routes from the present terminus of the Oregon Trunk at Bend. The tier of counties in the southern part of the state west of Lake County, vastly rich in resources, including timber, fruitgrowing, stock raising, farming and mining possibilities of almost unlimited proportions, have favorably impressed the Hill interests. That route will probably be selected instead of the route south through the eastern part of California to San Francisco.
