Chapetr II.
After establishing a colony at Port Orford in July, 1851, Captain William Tichenor resumed his regular Portland-San Francisco run. The Sea Gull, with Captain Tichenor in command continued to make regular trips and on August 29, 1851, left Portland with Dr. Anson Dart, superintendent of Indian Affairs, accompanied by H. H. Spaulding and J. L. Parish, two Methodist missionaries. At Astoria the steamer took on board Lieutenant Whyman with 11 soldiers, two mules and a mountain howitzer. The ship arrived at Port Orford on September 3. T-Vault had been sent out on a surveying expedition but his party met with disaster. They were attacked by the Indians, several of the men were killed and T-Vault went down the coast to Cape Blanco. He reached the mouth of the Sixes River, where the Indians took his Sharp's rifle away from him and also took all his clothing. The attack on T-Vault's surveying party occurred shortly before the arrival of Dr. Dart, the Indian agent with Spaulding and Parish. Rev. J. L. Parish at once offered to proceed to the scene of the murder and investigate the outrage. He took with him two Indians whom he had brought with him from the Columbia river and the chief of the Indians of Sixes River. This chief had come in and returned T-Vault's rifle and offered to guide Parish to where the Indians were so that a council could be held and the murderers apprehended. The council was held by Rev. Parish but the Indians were so outraged by their chief's action that immediately upon the departure of J. L. Parish they killed their chief and quartered him. One of the chief's three wives carried the chief's remains to their village, where she buried them and word was sent to Dr. Dart, the Indian agent, of the action of the Indians. He sent out runners and called a council of all the Indians. Spaulding and Parish and Dr. Dart, the Indian agent, returned to Astoria on board the Columbia in the latter part of September. On the return of the Columbia to port Orford she brought Samuel Culver to act as Indian Agent.

Next month both the Columbia and Sea Gull were chartered by the government to take Colonel Silas Casey and his troops consisting of Calvary and artillery to Port Orford. The Sea Gull brought Company C of the First Dragoons with 36 horses and 46 mule under Benicia. This company was under the command of Lieutenant Stanton and Stoneman. Colonel Casey who had arrived a few days previously on board the Columbia, chartered the Sea Gull to convey the troops to the mouth of the Coquille river while Lieutenant Stanton with two whale boats prepared to ascend the Coquille river in pursuit of those who were still hostile. They were landed from the Sea Gull though one boat load was ed, but before all the troops landed, a heavy gale made the so rough the Sea Gull anchored, waited for morning to land the rest. Next morning the storm was more severe so the Sea Gull had to return to Port Orford where she discharged the rest of the troops, who started by land for the Coquille river. Lieutenant Stoneman built a block house on the bluffs which commanded the Indian village and the river. The Indians were entirely unacquainted with firearms and when the howitzers threw their shells into the Indian village they were terrified. They fled in their canoes up the river and were pursued by the troops in the two whale boats. The Indians were so severely punished by the troops that they never as a tribe entered into hostilities against the white man again.
