T. RICHARDSON TELLS OF TRIP

Booster Reaches Eugene on Trip Homeward—Railway Line Well Built.

The Eugene Register says: That the new track of the Willamette Pacific railway as far as it is operation is as smooth as an old road and that the construction of the bridges between Eugene and the Siuslaw is the best he ever saw, was the statement of Tom Richardson, the well known Publicity man of Portland, who arrived in Eugene last evening from a trip through the Coos Bay and Siuslaw countries.

"The track is very smooth and one imagines he is riding on the main line of the Southern Pacific instead of on a line that has been used only a short time and in operation only a few weeks," said Mr. Richardson last night. "The bridges are wonderfully constructed. It looks as if they were built for a through transcontinental line, instead of a branch. The railway company has built these bridges with an eye to the future, believing that Coos Bay will some day be one of the large cities of the coast."

Florence Raises Fund. Mr. Richardson spent two weeks on the coast, going through Coos county. He said that the people of Coos Bay are absolutely determined to have deep water and are going to vote $300,000 bonds in addition to the $500,000 which have been already voted for the improvement of the harbor. At Bandon, too, the people are wide awake, he said, and are planning upon harbor work and other improvements.

At Florence Mr. Richardson addressed the Commercial Club Wednesday night. At that time a fund for promotion work was started. He says that six different interests subscribed $60 a year each for the fund and others subscribed lesser sums. He says he was greatly surprised at the interest taken in the future of the little city by its citizens.

"Florence is going after a water works system and they intend to work till they get it," said Mr. Richardson. "They will tan one of the numerous lakes on the Glenada side of the river and both cities will be supplied with water from the same system. They estimate that it will cost only about $20,000 to install the system."

RANDOLPH IS WRECK AGAIN

Capt. John Anderson's Boat Stranded on Columbia Bar—Many Accidents.

Capt. John Anderson's hoodoo continues to follow him and the schooner Randolph but he is escaping luckily as usual. T his time, the Randolph run aground on the Columbia river bar and was in a dangerous position for a time but according to the latest word from there, she was taken off safely. This makes about the 'steenth time that the Randolph has been wrecked at Rogue River, Yaquina or the Columbia in the last year or so.

Concerning it an Astoria dispatch says: "The little gasoline schooner Randolph is hard aground on the north side of the jetty sands in the lower harbor and her cargo will have to be lightened before she can go afloat."

"The craft was entering the river shortly after 12 o'clock last night, bringing 1200 case of salmon from Rogue River, and getting out of the channel, ran on the sands. The Point Adams and Cape Disappointment lifesaving crews hastened to the rescue, as did the tug Wallula."

"Efforts were made both this morning and tonight to float the stranded craft, and the Wallula broke one of her hawsers in the attempt, but the vessel was moved only about 12 feet. The Randolph lies in comparatively smooth water, is not damaged and her position is not dangerous."

THREE ENGAGE IN FIST FIGHT

Pat Hennessey Had Busy Time Before Departure of Train This Morning at Depot.

Blood besmeared the platform of the depot of the Coos Bay Roseburg & Eastern railroad just before the 8 o'clock limited pulled out this morning, when Pat Hennessey, superintendent of the Smith Powers mine, engaged in a fist fight with Victor Larson and H. F. Katzenbach, both of whom had been working at the mine.

It is understood that Hennessey discharged Katzenbach about ten days ago and that he contemplated discharging Larson. The three met at the depot platform this morning and according to those standing by at the time, Hennessey asked Larson why he wasn't working today. Whether Larson made any reply or not is a matter of conjecture, anyway Hennessey hit Larson and then Larson hit Hennessey, knocking him down.

When Hennessey got on his feet again he struck Katzenbach. The latter struck Hennessey in the mouth and the blood spouted. In the clinch that followed Hennessey got Katzenbach's left thumb in his mouth and almost bit it off. Katzenbach landed another blow on Hennessey's nose and floored him. By that time Hennessey's face and coat were covered with blood running from his mouth and nose and several men who had witnessed the fight separated them.

Hennessey was led away from the scene of battle but returned in less than three minutes for another round. This time he engaged Larson. The two passed three or four blows and then wrestled on the platform. When they were separated again there was more evidence of blood on the face of Hennessey as well as on the coat worn by Larson.

Marshal Carter was summoned by telephone and he hurried to the depot in an automobile. The train pulled out just about the time he got there, with Katzenbach and Larson aboard. It is not known whether they went to the mine or not. Hennessey was taken to the office of Dr. Dix where his bruises were patched up.
