THE CLUB WOMAN'S TOAST

Oh, what has become of the old-fashioned woman? The type that prevailed in the days long ago; When weaving and spinning and such homely duties Were the things woman was expected to know, She then had no chance for a broad education, Politics no theme for the busy housewife; There was never a thought of elvics or science, For those were the days where there was no club life.

In what great contrast is the present day woman. With her knowledge of music, old masters and art, Corinthian pillars and Ionic columns, Her story of Ibsen — all these things have part In the great scheme of modern day living. For improvement now seeks the mother and wife, And she knows that the way to be up and doing Is through that enjoyable mode of club life.

Club life has phases which are many and varied. It aims to develop, unfold and expand. It works through all lines, with progress the key note. And its influence is felt all over the land. Most practical questions of great vital moment, To lessen the workaday turmoil and strife Are handled most ably by competent women. Who study the issues in their round of club life.

Then here's to the club life, may it never diminish! And here's to our own club of which we may boast! May its good work continue, its power be far-reaching, As we sit at this table let us pledge it a toast: Then drink, friends, with me, to this club and its members, On all kinds of evil it is war to the knife; It stands for the best and much good has accomplished And ranks at the head of our city's club life.

—Virginia K. Patterson.

ate the idea of jealousy from the idea of sex. Jealousy is a MASCULINE noun, to a woman! She supposes it to be MAN'S dominant emotion; while man KNOWS it to be WOMAN'S.

The first sentimental confidence which the little high school girl whispers to her most intimate friend is that Jack is SIMPLY CRAZY about her, and he just won't let another boy speak to her! Such a delightful sense of values accrues to her from Jack's supposed jealousy!

And the chief gossip of that great army of the unemployed, the women residents of private hotels and boarding houses, is some tale of the jealousy which Beauty aroused in her first sweetheart, and in the next, and in the man she finally married, and in the man who came to late.

There are degrees of jealousy innumerable. Love affairs are often strangely duplicated, but there are as many types of the green-eyed monster as there are women!

Some women have never loved a man, and some no man has ever loved, but where is the woman who has never been jealous?

A man glories in the achievement of his friend and will further that achievement. But a woman is jealous even sometimes where she cannot compete.

Women who work have the deplorable habit of belittling all other women in the same employment. They seem obsessed by the idea that they can acquire superiority by depreciating another woman's effort.

In social life, a woman can seldom refrain from trying to climb higher by pushing other women lower.

LOVE IS CONSTRUCTIVE. JEALOUSY IS DESTRUCTIVE. Man is the great builder BECAUSE he is the great lover. He has made all of the arts and sciences and philosophies and governments which determine the SOCIAL Good.

Woman, because she is fond of society, considers herself a truly social being!

And now, for the first time, is a dreadful secret revealed: WOMAN IS BY NATURE DISTINCTLY ANTISOCIAL! Jealousy makes her so!

And until woman recognizes and overcomes jealousy as a FEMININE attribute, it will remain the supreme destroyer of her happiness and her achievement.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC.

On Tuesday of this week the Sunday school of the Episcopal church gave its annual picnic. The affair was a decided success from every standpoint. The day was a perfect one and the place chosen, just across the Bay, could not have been excelled as a frolic ground for the youngsters. A number were unable to join the party on account of illness. Mr. Bennett Swanton, assisted by the Rector, superintended the affair. After partaking of a profusion of good things, the children scattered about on the grass for games of various kinds, while the young matrons who joined the party scoured the woods for berries and incidentally to satisfy themselves that no place in the vicinity could be more beautiful than Portsmouth. When the Alice H. landed at the Marshfield dock shortly before 5 o'clock, no one felt that the day had been too strenuous and the only mishap was the loss of a hat by Doris Sengstacken coming across the Bay.

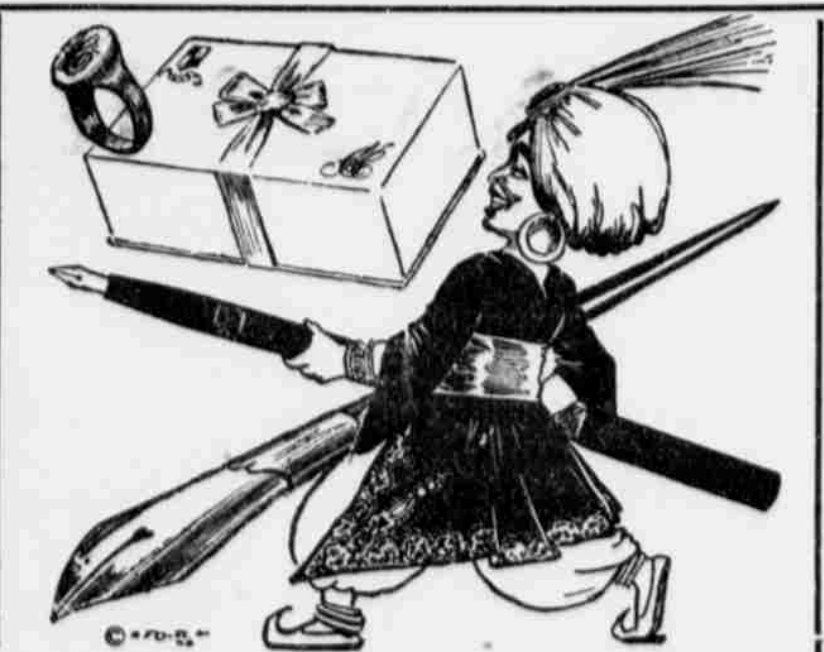

Those in the party were Morten and Virginia Coke, Abbie Ledward, Myrtle Buchanan, Maud Stutsman, Gladys Ferry, Josephine Thom, Proctor and Eleanor Flanagan, Pasquin Bradford, Leeland Bayliss, Gladys Crawford, Elizabeth and Edwin Swanton, Louise Lockhart, Ethel Davis, Grace Farrin, John Butler, Helen Merchant, Doris Sengstacken, Margaret, Jean and Robert E. Browning, Jr., Miss Helen Graham, Bennett Swanton, Rev. Robert E. Browning and Meddames J. S. Coke, Henry Sengstacken, E. Lothard McClure, Herbert Lockhart, Emma Nasburg, J. H. Flanagan, Robert E. Browning, W. S. Nicholson, Marv M. Browning, W. T. Merchant and Mrs. Farris.
