HOMESICK.

I'm sick of the sights and the sounds and smells,
 A-nd the grip of the city's heat,
 I want to go back to the up-state hills,
 To my home on the hill-side street.

I want to go back where the houses stand
 Far apart with the woods behind,
 Where the vesper greens of the trees and vines
 Lead their peace to my heart and mind.

I want to go back where the roses run
 And riot o'er lattice and wall,
 And the spicy odors of spruce and pine
 Settle down from trees sky-tall.

I want to go where the things God made
 Are the same as I used to see,
 And I want to hear the glad songs of birds,
 And the hum of the honey-bee.

I want to lie down on my attic bed,
 And perhaps while I'm there 'twill rain,
 And I'll hear once more the dance of the drops
 And their splash on the window-pane.

But what most of all I just long to see,
 Is my dear old mother's glad face,
 And to hear her call me her boy once more,
 And be held in her fond embrace.

So I'll start today for the up-state hills,
 To my home on the hill-side street,
 For I'm sick of the sights and the sounds and smells,
 And the grip of the city's heat.

GIRLS are constantly propounding a question like this: "I have three young men calling on me. Which of them should I marry?" Or, "I have been going out with two boys for the last six months. Which should I marry if they both propose?" writes Doris Blake.

When this query arises in your mind, dear young girls, you should ask yourself seriously: "Am I quite sure that the young men in question want to marry me?"

No girl has a right to suppose that a man is in love with her until he tells her so. If a man wants to marry you he will ask you. And until he has spoken you have no right to hint about his intentions and attentions to other people.

A man may dance with you any number of times. He may take you motoring or boating. He may pay you compliments and buy you sweets. But these attentions alone really form too slender a foundation to build life's "great hope" upon.

Every girl in the world—provided she is not hopelessly unattractive—gets her share of chocolates and "sweet nothings" before her youth is passed. But the average young man doesn't hurry into matrimony. He chooses his wife. In the words of an old game, "He knools to the prettiest, boxes to the wildest, be-

One kissing the one he loves the best."
 He flirts with many before he marries one!

So, girls, don't be prone to imagine that Billy and Harry and Frank are "serious" when they simply pay you the little attentions which, after all, are a girl's prerequisites. It is true you may be the only girl in the world to one of them. But let him jump to his own conclusions. Let him ask the question, "Which shall I marry?"

Don't forget that "making love" is man's work. If you try to do it you will only succeed in making yourself cheap.

It's a sentimental day dreamer of a girl who sees in every young man whom she meets a "fairy prince."

Of course, I know that every normal girl has her moments of sentiment. When she feels depressed and lonely she thinks how nice it would be to have some one to look after her and tell her she is nicer and better than any other girl in the world. And if she is an ordinary human girl these vague thoughts of a flame will take the form of some one whom she knows.

But the wise girl when she gets as far as this just pulls herself together and takes the compliments and pretty speeches as lightly as they are offered and waits for the proposal before she asks: "Which of these men shall I marry?"
