SOME CUSSING.

SOME Coos Bay people are natural born cussers. They cuss at the heat, and they cuss at the cold.

WITH THE TEA AND THE TOAST

GOOD EVENING.

Courage is the basis of happiness; courage wins honor and respect; courage makes friends for us.

The Summer Girl.

The summer girl! Once more do poets spout. And artists rainbow fantasies unfurl.

Some Coos Bay girls sing because they like to hear their voices, but a man always imagines they are singing for spite.

An altruist is a man who carries an umbrella all day and is glad it didn't rain, because a whole lot of people haven't umbrellas.

Bacteriologists say kissing must go. It already goes with some Coos Bay girls.

There are some overdressed women on Coos Bay who can use the backs of their husbands' coats for mirrors.

THE WISE GUY SAYS:

"Anyway a fat woman can always look at her ankles and imagine she has a good figure."

THE QUIET OBSERVER SAYS:

"There are 71,896,423,009 places in the world where your wife might be when you are standing on a corner making a hit with a pretty girl, but your wife simply has to pass that corner."

If a man imagines that "the world owes him a living," he has to prove himself a good debt collector.

NOTHING DEFINITE IN LOCAL PHONE DEAL.

W. F. Douglas of the Coos Bay Home Telephone Company stated today that there was absolutely nothing definite in the reported negotiations of Chas. Hall of Hood River for the purchase of the company.

BETTER HOMES NATIONS NEED

Rev. A. F. Bassford Delivers Eloquent Sermon Here on "Home Ties."

There was a good-sized audience at the union service of the local churches at the Christian Church on Sunday night. Rev. A. F. Bassford of the Baptist Church delivered a very impressive sermon on "Memories of Home."

Mr. Bassford stated by way of introduction that at the request of the Oregon Social Hygiene Society and some of the local brethren, he would speak in the interests of the "Back-to-the-Home" movement on the subject of "Home Ties, and the Memories of Home."

"Oh, ye who have little children, Give them happy memories."

He said in part:

"The Prodigal Son started out in life with all the advantages of a good home. When later in life he started forth to make his fame and fortune, he left home supported and reinforced by the most hallowed memories God ever gives a young man. He had the memory of a good father, a loving mother and a good home.

"The one outstanding tragedy of our home life today is the tragedy of parental neglect. Parents wish their children to turn out well, but all too often are not willing to pay the price that will assure it.

end in disappointment and shame. The fathers shirk their God-given responsibility and overload the already heavily burdened mother with the religious nurture of the child, often further handicapping them with the blight of a father's indifference or bad example.

"There are fathers who are piling up fortune and winning fame, but through neglect and indifference to their home responsibilities are losing their boys. It is a fair question, I take it, to ask: 'What shall I profit a man, if through industry and business sagacity he gains a fortune or fame, and through neglect and indifference he damn his boys?'"

"There is no protection in the hour of temptation like the memory of Christian parents and a Christian home. These were the factors which ultimately saved the prodigal. No boy ever gets wholly beyond the influence of home and the love of good parents.

"There is another side to this truth we must not ignore. They tell us that during the Civil War the worst tragedies were not enacted upon bloody battlefields, but in the lonely country homes.

"But there are many homes tonight where there is no such consolation to comfort the hearts that mourn. The light still burns in the window and a worn woman and a weary old man sit in solitude and sorrow by the open fireplace. Their hair is white with the snow of many winters and the furrows run deep all over their faces. They speak and sigh often. They are the mothers of the prodigals and the fathers of the outcasts. They, too, had a loved son whom they have lost. He was lost, not on the field of battle fighting in Freedom's cause, but in the distant city. He had left home with high hopes and great plans and expectations. For a time all went well. His letters glowed with the warmth and light of good news.

"What that tragedy means to fathers and mothers, that and much more it means to God, the great Father of us all. If there should be a wanderer here tonight, I appeal to you by the love of father and mother and of God, return. Your Father awaits you. To those of us who are parents, my parting word is: 'Go home. Determine to make your homes the happiest places on earth for your children. Give them the inspiration of a Christian example and precept. Teach them to love God, the church and all things good. Don't delay; you will not have them long, and you will not be here long yourselves.'

"Oh, ye who have little children, Give them happy memories NOW!"
