News Notes From the City-By-the-Sea As Found in The Recorder.

AMBITIOUS SCHOOL PLANS.

They have ambitious school plans the Coos Bay country. If those plans work out successfully, and here seems to be no reason why hey should not, the Coos River school will be a type that will serve is an example for the best rural chool endeavor in the state.

The Coos Bay school is to be one of those combined districts instituions; and we venture to say that he things proposed with respect to could not even be contemplated with any hope of consummation un-ter the old single district plan, hereby there would be three schools nstead of one

Consider the advances proposed, and that probably will be realized! An agricultural course of the most practical character for the elemenary grades; an experimental farm of five acres to be included in the school grounds; and the whole unter a competent instructor. This one feature of itself will be the most narked advance in rural school activities yet made in the state. It will touch the practical side of life in the rural community, and will do more than anything else that could imagined to arouse the interest of the farmer parents in the con-just of the school. In addition to this agricultural tepartment there is to be a high school course with laboratory equipnent for scientific studies; and we must conclude from all this that the atmosphere of this prospective Coos River school will make for practical enowledge and true culture beyond inything that so far has been dreamed as possible in the conduct of rural

The full ambition of the Coos Bay people may not be realized immedi-ately, but we like to be optimistic as to that, for it is a departure that aims at all there is in that ambition as not only possible but probable and practical. It is simply a case of oing with the school money of three istricts that which never has been and never can be done with the districts maintained separately.-Portland Telegram.
